I suspect the potential amateur -- remember, the context of the discussion was recruitment and googling 'amateur radio' -- isn't very likely to have a clue about the politics of ham radio

> If you are not going to recruit from the internet, where, the > dum-dums on the football field? Bars? Churches? Parks? The People interested in ham radio, who come on the internet to find out about ham radio, are not very likely to do it in a USENET newsgroup. They're far more likely to use a search engine to research their interest, and that research (whether good or bad, whether you like it or not) is going to point to the ARRL.

Google, Yahoo, MSN all have the ARRL as their top hit for the search term 'amateur radio'.

> I am afraid the new crowd will need to come from here ... but hey, > that is only one mans' opinion.

If they came "here", e.g. RRAP, they'd run away from ham radio so fast, if they concluded even a portion of the drivel posted in this newsgroup was reflective of ham radio as a whole.

Personally, if the applicant has "political aspirations", I would refer him/her into some .political group ... we really do NOT need them in the hobby of amateur radio--and that is possibly the greatest reason I'd like to see the absence of the ARRL.

USENET? I said "THE INTERNET." (however, schools and community events/functions are a good place to begin recruiting at) And, they should be shown the availability of training materials made available by just-little-plain-old-amateurs--it is much more than enough to get them through any test, else we fail again ... but, NOT ARRL materials, that will turn them away most of all.

Yes, that is a shame :(

Personally, I do not run from a good fight, argument, not even a discussion--doesn't look like you ran too far--nor the others here with us ...

Good points, all of 'em ...

It is interesting how times change, Dave. Just as an aside, those are the types of roads I see out these days. Things have changed, I suspect that autos are more comfortable and better handling today.
Certainly if a person couldn't drive yet, there would be another hurdle getting the parents to join in on the fun. All the more challenge.

On what do you base that conclusion, Mike?

I see the accessibility of the tests as improved. But that's about it.

Like what?

How?

The old tests were definitely not open book in any sense of the word.
You weren't even allowed to bring your own pencils in some cases.

How about a question like this:

"A manufacturer guarantees his crystals to be within .01% of the marked frequency, when used in the recommended circuit at 20 degrees
C. The crystals have a negative temperature coefficient of 50 parts per million per degree C.

What is the lowest whole-kilocycle frequency that should be ordered for a 40 meter crystal, if the crystal is to be used in the recommended circuit over the temperature range of 5 to 35 degrees C?

Allow 1 additional kilocycle to allow for crystal and component aging.

Show all work."

No open book, no cheat sheets, no formulas given - and that's just one question on the General exam.

How would the existence of a few tests argue against that?

It's a completely different situation. Learning Morse Code is directly related to getting the license and what is done with it. Traveling to a distant city back in the days before the Interstate Highway System isn't.

> I can't > imagine that a peron who went to the trouble of learning the

I can. And it's not about how anyone felt - it's about the reality of the requirements.

It all depends on the situation, Mike. Consider the case posed by K8MN,

which was very common in the 1950s and 1960s. How was a young 1950s ham supposed to get to a license test session 120 miles away, and be there before 8 AM on a weekday morning?

Remember too that the distance rule was "air line", meaning straight-line distance on the map, not actual distance on the road. In many places, 125 miles air-line could be twice that on the road. More than three hours at the common speed limit of 40 mph - if everything went according to plan.

For me, the biggest difficulty in getting to the FCC office was the fact that tests in the Philly office were only given on Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays - which were all school days. Young hams like me had to wait for summer, or a school holiday that was not a Federal holiday. (There was no way a school kid would skip school for a day to take a ham radio exam!) With the 30 day wait to retest, there was a real incentive to pass on the first try.

Round trip or one way? Weekday or weekend? Did you have to be there at 8 AM or be turned away?

Most of all, note the wide variation in distances. I'll bet you went to different VE sessions at various hamfests, some close to home, some not. You went when it was convenient for you.

My point is that in the Conditional days there was no choice. You went to the FCC office, on their schedule, unless you lived beyond the Conditional distance.

And note this most of all: FCC didn't change the distance in 1954 because of concern for hams having to travel long distances to get to an exam session.
FCC changed the distance to reduce their workload giving the exams!

You're assuming the person has a vehicle and a driver's license. I already knew Morse code from Boy Scouts but I had a heck of a time talking my parents into taking off from work and driving their '37 Chevrolet rattletrap six hours round trip to Houston just so I could take the Novice exam when I was 14 years old.

Also more reliable.

When I was a kid, a trip to the New Jersey beaches was a major journey. Most of the roads were 2 lanes, and you slowed down through every town on the way.
Three hours from the bridge over the Delaware to the bridge over the bay was very good time. Today the trip takes half that time, due to better roads and better cars.

> Certainly if a person couldn't drive yet, there would be another hurdle

Apply that logic to the Morse Code test - all the more challenge, right?

And recall that FCC changed the distance to reduce their workload, not to make the exams more accessible to hams.

btw, the old License Manuals are probably still under copyright.
Quoting some of the questions is one thing, and comes under "fair use". Scanning the entire book and putting on the web is a different thing. Couldn't hurt to ask ARRL - I don't think they have any plans to reissue those old LMs. They might even like the idea, if it were posed as a historic interest thing.

The study guide questions and the old regulations were Govt. issued,
and so could be used, I think.

That resolves an ongoing bit of confusion on my part. I haven't been able to remember if I took my Novice exam in 1953 or 1954. What I do remember is that I took the exam during a Thanksgiving break at the FCC office in the Philly custom house and that there was no other way for me to take the test. Based on your June 10 '54 date I must have taken the test in the fall of '53 when I was a high school sophomore.

That's very strange. There were very few ham tests given on the days when I took my Novice exam and again when I took my General exam a year later, the exam room was overloaded with guys taking commercial exams on both occasions. I was the *only * ham in the room when I took my General vs. a couple dozen others. The examiner opened the office with a question "is there anybody taking a ham radio license test today?" and I raised my hand. "OK, let's get you outta here." Being the only ham in a room full of grumbling commercial guys was a bit unnerving . . sorta like "OK kid just do it and hit the road."

I've taken three ham tests and one commercial license test in '53, '54 nd '68. All the exams were given by FCC examiners at the Philly office and none of them cost me a dime.

I swapped my original callsign for my current callsign at the FCC office in Gettysburg in '77. It's not a "vanity" callsign and it was also a freebie. I have yet to be be involved with a volunteer examiner or pay the FCC for anything. Cheap, cheap . . !

I'll answer this and the last question at one time. 75 miles, 150 miles. mail in tests, move closer than the "limit" lose your license if you don't retest. Don't move, keep it. That's just a little bit. It all seems arbitrary, and almost capricious to me. YMMV.

Mailing the test in? At least ther was no chance whatsoever of looking up the answer in the book, eh?

That was an important thing at that time. And to be honest, I would have to look a few things up to give a reasonable accurate answer. But the math is not that difficult, unless I am way off. I could give an answer I had around 50 percent confidence in now, but if I was wrong, it would be like the guff that Dave has to take with his "out of band frenchmen". Mike the dumb nickle Extra that couldn't answer a question from an old test! ;^)

But unless the question isn't from any book, or just somehow shows up on a test with no references anywhere to be found, I'd do a bit of research and the answer would be forthcoming. Hard? Not in the least.

Maybe the steely eyed FCC examiner watches you take the test you mail in so that you don't have to take the test in front of the steely eyed FCC examiner?

Jim, am I being obtuse or what? Seems to me that if there are only a couple tests, that cheating would be much easier, that retesting would likely expose the applicant to the same test again, and that your "buddy" could give you some valuable hints. I saw the same question from your 1960's essay type question, and my 1950's guide. Unless we are arguing extremely small points here, any differences between the tests of the good old days and now just aren't big enough to be that concerned about.

In fact, as this discussion goes on in here and outside of this group, I am more and more convinced that an equally acceptable explanation is a sense of nostalgia, a yearning for good old days that perhaps never really existed, and the fact that middle aged men are capable of becoming upset about just about anything. I sometimes feel the tug myself, until I remember just how the good old days were.

I could be wrong though.....

I had to look up to see what we were discussiong here, Jim. My point is that I seriously doubt that eliminating the mail ins harmed Amateur radio. Numbers continued to grow (I believe) and by the 60's, American society was becoming much more mobile.

But they did, didn't they?

I had a rough time talking my parents into getting me my first radios. I had to convince them I was serious. Perhaps the same situation existed for you?

I'm pretty sure that they are still covered under copyright. The scanning could take a long, long time.

Federal tests are copyrighted?

What is wrong with that picture? If they are using my tax dollars, they are mine and everyone elses!

My dad chucked a successful job as a writer at the Palm Beach Bureau of the Miami Herald to become an Episcopal priest. I lobbied for some help with gear and we made a deal. I paid for my used receiver from the proceeds of a newspaper route and he and Mom bought the used transmitter as a Christmas gift. Things like logbooks, a key, antenna wire and coaxial cable were begged or purchased from the paper route money.

I listened to Dad for months about how all of this ham radio stuff (and my guitar) were just "kicks" I was on and that they'd be gathering dust in the closet. That sort of came true as my first hamshack was in the walk-in closet off my bedroom. If the stuff gathered any dust, it was in the closet.

After I'd been a ham (and a guitarist) for a number of decades, I used to ask Dad if he thought there'd come a day when I'd pack all of that stuff up and put it into a basement somewhere.

indeed I don't think so but the ARRL may have some have had some copyright on materail to study for the test

but in any case copyright lasts for 28 years as I recall althought that was lenghen so it might still cover 74 or 75 but not likely

Read along with us, "John". We're discussing ARRL License manuals. The study material was not actual FCC test material.

You have some distortion in your receiver. Your tax dollars weren't in the picture. The material was copyrighted by the ARRL.

What part of "ARRL License manuals" are you having difficulty understanding?

Quite right. That is what I mean about that ARRL, they are dug into the "Immorality: The morality of those who are having a better time." -- H. L. Mencken

"Consider that language a moment. 'Purposefully and materially supported hostilities against the United States' is in the eye of the beholder, and this administration has proven itself to be astonishingly impatient with criticism of any kind. The broad powers given to Bush by this legislation allow him to capture, indefinitely detain, and refuse a hearing to any American citizen who speaks out against Iraq or any other part of the so-called 'War on Terror.'

"If you write a letter to the editor attacking Bush, you could be deemed as purposefully and materially supporting hostilities against the United States. If you organize or join a public demonstration against Iraq, or against the administration, the same designation could befall you. One dark-comedy aspect of the legislation is that senators or House members who publicly disagree with Bush, criticize him, or organize investigations into his dealings could be placed under the same designation. In effect, Congress just gave Bush the power to lock them up." -- William Rivers Pitt

"It has become clear in recent months that a critical mass of the American people have seen through the lies of the Bush administration; with the president's polls at an historic low, growing resistance to the war Iraq, and the Democrats likely to take back the Congress in mid-term elections, the Bush administration is on the ropes. And so it is particularly worrying that President Bush has seen fit, at this juncture to, in effect, declare himself dictator." -- Frank Morales

To Whom It May Concern:

Just so you have a complete picture of Paul W. Schleck, I took the following from one of his posts in news.groups.proposals:

"Mark Morgan, KB9RQZ, is correct that all of our proposed moderators and consultants hold the highest class of Amateur Radio Service license in their countries (Amateur Extra for the U.S. team members, Class A or similar in the case of Jack Cook, who holds both UK and Australian licenses). However, that doesn't mean that we would be judgemental or unfair to other classes of license. We would certainly be open to adding moderators to our team that hold other classes of license. We will certainly decline articles that are disrespectful to or prejudicial against other participants for any reason, including license class. We would prefer to judge ideas, and take posts at face value, rather than prejudge individuals and credentials in a vacuum."

Now that just speaks volumes about this man, his caliber, his "ethical standards", etc. Now, doesn't it?

Gawd! I feel sick ...

Warmest regards,
JS

Unbelievable, is there ANYONE here who believes Mr. Schlock... err, Mr. Schleck would be "fair" and just to ALL? That he would consider ANYTHING other than his own petty gripes and bitches? If so, step right up here to defend the man, I am waiting ...

Schleck is all about self-aggrandizement. His posts are all about himself.
Read his posts, the few that he sends. Paul is convinced that he, and only he, has true insight into Ham matters and that he, Paul Schleck, knows better than us, the Great Unwashed.
Does the term, "Stuffed Shirt" come to mind?

Yep hardly as$wipe. Not only did you suck them off. You also gave each a rimj0b. I heard that you like it when someone as$f*cks you while dunking your deformed head into a toilet and then repeated flushes with each thrust into your ever expanding as$hole. I heard your dad initiated you into this type of sexual activity.

Wodger:

ABSOLUTELY! And, he is much, much more. That bit of his just took the GREATEST LIAR I have ever known and made that liar look like nothing ...

Schleck is good alright, the man has brass b*lls the size of basketballs, and his little trolling bunch of henchmen are sickening--strange they ALL seem to have extra licenses, isn't it?

Course, he just "swore" to the committee that they would not be "unfair" or "judgmental", what a GREAT FARCE!

Warmest regards,
JS

Here is what my response to Mr. Schleck would be on his proposed moderated newsgroup:

Mr. Paul W. Schleck:

I would question your ability to be a fair and just moderator. I have participated in the rec.radio.amateur.??? newsgroups, I have witnessed your abilities and goals.

There, I have seen you and your extra class henchmen attempt to constantly steer the course of its' flow, intimidation and threats have often been your tools. I have watched you and others look down upon other amateurs who will now be allowed to take a "No Code Amateur Exam." In no way have I ever seen you be even close to being "fair" or "just" in your opinions, judgments, statements, etc. I have heard many in that group call the present amateur exams "dumbed down."

Here, you have blatantly lied as to your purposes. You seek a forum where a very limited band of ideas, concepts, beliefs and discussion can take forth. You seek to establish a "class based newsgroup", this class system will VERY MUCH depend on the ancient art of morse code and the amateur exam.

If any here doubt, they only have to sift though the old posts and check past posts of you and those you name as would be-moderators and they will know. What I say, I say with great belief.

You wish to establish a "masonic temple type of brotherhood" here in the public newsgroups. You and a few of your cronies wish to establish tight and strict control over this group. And, from what I can see and guess to your goals, you do this SOLELY for the purpose of stroking your own egos.

Many of the "weirdos", hecklers and vulgar individuals in the other amateur groups are due to you and those sharing your same views and using your "street smart" methods--in effect, your "control freak" attitude and "better-than-thou" stance has created them.

It would serve justice if you were forced to stay and learn to "get along and play well" with the other "children."

Your words show a fine demonstration of stealth and deception; I don't believe I have ever seen a better example than you have presented to us here. I certainly would nominate you for the "Silver Tongue Award."

However, I would certainly NOT vote to allow you to slink and sneak off from the tragedy you have helped to create.

Although you make this request and proposal out of your personal need to feed your ego, and surround yourself with those who would feed your ego for you, and "live in your own little world", I think it would be a crime to allow you to do so.

The potential you have to abuse this proposed-moderated newsgroup to the detriment of others demands it should not be allowed ... I for one would vote NO, but then, you already knew that ...

Regards,
John Smith I

"When I told Abbie Hoffman that he was the first one who made me laugh since Lenny Bruce died, Hoffman said, "Really? He was my god." The combination of satirical irreverence and sense of justice that Bruce and Hoffman shared was the real spirit behind the Yippies--a term I coined to describe a phenomenon that already existed: an organic coalition of stoned hippies and political activists who engaged in such actions as throwing money on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, then explaining to reporters the meaning of that symbolism. Folksinger Phil Ochs summed it up: "A demonstration should turn you on, not turn you at best it's careless shorthand; at worst it's deliberate demonization.

The idea was that the FCC was balancing access to the test sessions with maintaining control over the process. They were very concerned about the whole process back then.

Remember that we're talking about 50+ years ago. Back then, there were very clear memories of spy activities during both World Wars where radio was used. (A US amateur discovered one during WW1 and brought it to the attention of the authorities by recording the transmission). The '50s were the Cold War and the McCarthy era, too.

Maintaining control over every step of the licensing process was a big deal to FCC back then.

It may seem arbitrary and capricious today, but it didn't back then.
Don't leave CONUS without a passport, btw.

The way it worked was that you found a volunteer examiner (note the lack of caps) and s/he sent away for the exam and the other forms.

When the test came from FCC in its special sealed envelope, the volunteer examiner would not open it until the actual exam session began, and would seal it up in another special envelope and send it back to FCC. There was a form that had to be notarized, where both the examinee and the volunteer examiner swore that the exam was conducted according to the rules. Most people took such things very seriously back then, particularly when the Feds were involved.

This may seem wide open to corruption, but I do not know of any cases where the by-mail exam process was compromised. Rumors of cheating do not count.

Remember too that this was in the days before copy machines were common, and getting a "photostat" was a big deal.

I took the Novice exam from a local volunteer examiner back in 1967.
He took the process very seriously, as did I. He wanted to help new hams, but he wasn't about to compromise the process or risk his license, a fine
and a prison term.

Still is, in a way. The question could be modernized to calculating
the
dial setting on a ham rig where the temperature coefficient and possible
error of the reference oscillator are known.

> And to be honest, I would > have to look a few things up to give a reasonable accurate answer.

The point is that the person taking the test did not have those options. They'd have to answer that sort of question with just pencil, paper, and maybe a slide rule. And the actual exam question would be similar, but different - maybe it would state that a certain crystal was on hand, and then ask if it met the criteria to be inside the band under all operating conditions. Maybe the temperature coefficient would be positive above a certain temperature and negative below. And that would be one question on the 50 question General test.

I am confident that if you studied the concepts in that question, and worked out the answer to it and similar questions a few times, you'd be OK. But that's not the point.

Can you see that being given a study question like that, and having to work out a similar but different question during the exam, is a completely different thing from a multiple choice public pool test?

The research would have to be done before the test, though.

And it's not about "hard". It's about how much the examinee has to actually understand the material, and be able to demonstrate that understanding.

There are ways to cheat almost any system. Do you know of any actual cheating under the old system? There have been documented cases of suspected cheating under the VEC system, where the FCC caleed in hams who then flunked the retest.

The process is a big part of it. But as I said before, the old exam process is gone and won't come back any time soon - if ever.

Well, I'm not upset at all. Just accurate. Some people don't like accuracy.

And I would say that human beings - young, old, male, female - are capable of becoming upset about just about anything.

The most easily-upset person who posts to rrap isn't middle aged - he's old. Gets upset over any disagreement with his views...;-)

2828. Revealed: how eBay sellers fix auctions

Revealed: How eBay sellers fix auctions

http://www.timesonline.co.uk/newspaper/0,,176-2570050,00.html

Recorded excerpts of meetings with Paraskevaides

CUSTOMERS of the internet auction site eBay are being defrauded by unscrupulous dealers who secretly bid up the price of items on sale to boost profits. An investigation by The Sunday Times has indicated that the practice of artificially driving up prices - known as shill bidding - is widespread across the site.

Last week one of the UK's biggest eBay sellers admitted in a taped conversation with an undercover reporter that he was prepared to use business associates to bid on his goods for him. Our inquiries found evidence that a number of businesses - ranging from overseas property agencies to car dealerships - have placed bids on their own items using fake identities. The cases raise questions about whether eBay, the world's biggest auction site, is doing enough to protect consumers.

Shill bidding is against eBay rules and is illegal under the 2006 Fraud Act. However, the resulting higher prices on the site boost the value of eBay's share of the sales.

Last November eBay changed its rules to conceal bidders' identity - making it even more difficult for customers to see whether sellers are bidding on their own lots. Since its launch seven years ago, eBay's UK website has attracted more than 15m customers. It sells more than 10m items at any given time. One of the beneficiaries of the boom is Eftis Paraskevaides, a former gynaecologist, from Cambridgeshire. He has become a "Titanium PowerSeller" - one of eBay's handful of top earners - selling more than £1.4m worth of antiquities a year on the site.

In a conversation with an undercover reporter last week, Paraskevaides claimed shill bidding was commonplace on eBay. When the reporter asked whether he arranged for associates to bid on his own items, he replied: "Well, if I put something really expensive (up for sale) and I was concerned that it was going for nothing, I would phone a friend of mine, even a client of mine who buys from me, and say: For Christ's sake, I sell you 100 quids' worth of items a week . . . just put two grand on it, will you?" The reporter was posing as a seller of valuable antiquities. He inquired whether Paraskevaides could sell them on eBay and guarantee a minimum price. He replied: "Leave it to me (laughs). Don't call it shill bidding. Then I won't be accused of shill bidding. Yes. I mean - I've got people. "I've got some of my big clients who buy big items off me, I look after them. So I can get on the phone to America and say: Mr XXXX . . . you're a multi-millionaire. You buy a hundred grand's worth off me a year. Do me a favour would you. Just put - yeah. Exactly." He claimed eBay would never follow up a complaint against him for shill bidding because he generated about £15,000 a month in commission for the company. "Are they going to ban somebody who's making them the best part of 15 grand a month? No," he said.

After being told that he had been talking to an undercover reporter, Paraskevaides denied that he had ever shill bidded on eBay and claimed he was talking about clients who sometimes bid on expensive items if they wished to protect the price. However The Sunday Times discovered businesses that have been bidding on their own items. One leading dealer from London admitted last week that that he had shill bidded in the past.

A spokesman for eBay said he expected that the company would now launch an investigation into Paraskevaides. Anyone caught shill bidding risks a permanent ban. The spokesman added: "The change to the way bidder IDs are shown has already resulted in a safer environment for users."

Those are just two data points, and if you went in the fall and spring, you missed the big summer push.

In any event, work overload at FCC was the cited reason for the change.

btw, when I was between sophomore and junior year of high school (1970),
I went to that same office - to take the Extra exam. The place was crowded but I was the only one there to take the Extra, so the examiner took me first.

I took the Novice from a local ham in '67, the Tech and Advanced in '68, the Extra in '70 and the commercial in '72. All the ham licenses except Novice cost money - you musta just missed the fee thing in '68.
I think it was $9 back then.

I swapped my old 2x3 3-land call for N2EY in '77 as well, when I moved to the Empire State. Sequentially issued and free, not a vanity call.
Kept it when I moved back.

John,

Here's a site that summarizes if documents are still under copyright or not.

http://www.copyright.cornell.edu/training/Hirtle_Public_Domain.htm

Basically if the work was published in 1923 or later, there is a potential for it to be still under copyright. Copyright laws have changed a lot.

There is nothing in the statement as printed that would justify your

That's great - and how it should be.

But not all families are like that. For example, "helping out" is defined differently by different families.

In my case, the parental units defined "helping out" as allowing me to use a corner of the basement for my radio stuff, and allowing me to hang antennas from the various trees and from the side of the house.
Plus I didn't have to pay for the electricity I used to run the radio corner.

Everything else connected with ham radio was on me. That's why I say I was lucky to live so close to an FCC exam point.

How long would it take to drive from there to Philly or Pittsburgh back before the Interstate Highway system?

What do you think it was like in the Rockies, where 175 miles air-line could be twice that by road?

It was a serious event, more than exciting. If a kid timed it right, there could be as many as three chances to test in a single summer. But it was a long stretch through the school year. About the only chance we had back then was the Christmas break - if the holiday didn't also close the FCC office.

> No sarcasm here, I'm serious.

The point I would make is that the perceived "difficulty" included both the test itself and accessing it. As I have said before, making the test
sessions more accessible is a Good Thing.

The facts are somewhat different.

Amateur radio in the USA grew from about 60,000 hams in 1946 to about 250,000
in 1964. That's a quadrupling in less than 20 years, which works out to around 8% growth per year for 18 years. At least 190,000 new hams if nobody dropped out. Probably over 200,000 - more than 10,000 per year.

Then in 1965 the growth suddenly slowed to a trickle. In the next decade or so, the numbers hovered around 250,000, with some years a little up and some a little down. That was the year the Conditional distance went from 75 miles to 175 miles, and the FCC added enough exam points so that almost all of CONUS was covered.

Do you think that change might have affected growth?

While it's easy to condemn shill bidding, and it's technically illegal, hopefully we all realize that it's a common practice in both live and online auctions. If you go to an auction house where high-end items are being sold (jewelry, antiques, etc.) do you not think that the seller and/or auctioneer have people in the audience bidding up the price?

"Bignose Bernie the Bagelman" <auntkrebes4@yahoo.com> wrote in message news:1169989750.071762.97670@p10g2000cwp.googlegroups.com...
Revealed: How eBay sellers fix auctions

Recorded excerpts of meetings with Paraskevaides

CUSTOMERS of the internet auction site eBay are being defrauded by unscrupulous dealers who secretly bid up the price of items on sale to boost profits. An investigation by The Sunday Times has indicated that the practice of artificially driving up prices - known as shill bidding - is widespread across the site.

Last week one of the UK's biggest eBay sellers admitted in a taped conversation with an undercover reporter that he was prepared to use business associates to bid on his goods for him. Our inquiries found evidence that a number of businesses - ranging from overseas property agencies to car dealerships - have placed bids on their own items using fake identities. The cases raise questions about whether eBay, the world's biggest auction site, is doing enough to protect consumers.

Shill bidding is against eBay rules and is illegal under the 2006 Fraud Act. However, the resulting higher prices on the site boost the value of eBay's share of the sales.

Last November eBay changed its rules to conceal bidders' identity - making it even more difficult for customers to see whether sellers are bidding on their own lots. Since its launch seven years ago, eBay's UK website has attracted more than 15m customers. It sells more than 10m items at any given time. One of the beneficiaries of the boom is Eftis Paraskevaides, a former gynaecologist, from Cambridgeshire. He has become a "Titanium PowerSeller" - one of eBay's handful of top earners - selling more than £1.4m worth of antiquities a year on the site.

In a conversation with an undercover reporter last week, Paraskevaides claimed shill bidding was commonplace on eBay. When the reporter asked whether he arranged for associates to bid on his own items, he replied: "Well, if I put something really expensive (up for sale) and I was concerned that it was going for nothing, I would phone a friend of mine, even a client of mine who buys from me, and say: For Christ's sake, I sell you 100 quids' worth of items a week . . . just put two grand on it, will you?" The reporter was posing as a seller of valuable antiquities. He inquired whether Paraskevaides could sell them on eBay and guarantee a minimum price. He replied: "Leave it to me (laughs). Don't call it shill bidding. Then I won't be accused of shill bidding. Yes. I mean - I've got people. "I've got some of my big clients who buy big items off me, I look after them. So I can get on the phone to America and say: Mr XXXX . . . you're a multi-millionaire. You buy a hundred grand's worth off me a year. Do me a favour would you. Just put - yeah. Exactly." He claimed eBay would never follow up a complaint against him for shill bidding because he generated about £15,000 a month in commission for the company. "Are they going to ban somebody who's making them the best part of 15 grand a month? No," he said.

After being told that he had been talking to an undercover reporter, Paraskevaides denied that he had ever shill bidded on eBay and claimed he was talking about clients who sometimes bid on expensive items if they wished to protect the price. However The Sunday Times discovered businesses that have been bidding on their own items. One leading dealer from London admitted last week that that he had shill bidded in the past.

A spokesman for eBay said he expected that the company would now launch an investigation into Paraskevaides. Anyone caught shill bidding risks a permanent ban. The spokesman added: "The change to the way bidder IDs are shown has already resulted in a safer environment for users."

John,

I don't see a serious problem with Paul considering your quote or anything else that I've seen so far.

Let's see... He clearly says that we are not going to require a specific licence class to be a moderator. That seems fair.

So Where's the beef in your quote?

I can tell you that nobody in the team even noticed that we all where extras until Mark brought it up. So to my knowledge that was not a pre-condition for acceptance in the team. I do recall that they needed to be Hams, but that seems reasonable. I was there from the start of this, being responsible for setting up the mail reflector we use as well as setting up the shell account we use for the moderation software, so I should know.

It seems to me that you guys just oppose the creation of the moderated group and you have chosen to engage in personal attacks on the proponents in an effort to keep it from happening.

This is the best you can do? Do you have any real evidence here?

JS, I dunno. You have to recall that for the very longest time (and still) there has been prejudice against No-Code Technicians. They are "stupid, lazy, knuckledraggers with southern accents, welfare mothers of color with their hands out, etc, etc, etc."

Only recently have people questioned the megalomania of certain Extras, their need to have a government crutch to maintain their self-worth and status, etc.

So just as the sword began to cut both ways...

What you won't be able to get to in this "judge ideas, and take posts at face value" is the motivations of individuals who present ideas, and make posts at face value. For example, we will never know why people would eat Robesin's excrement, only that he says they do.

Universities and the public would be better served with teachers having a Masters degree and real work experience... instead of a bunch

In this case, no.

I don't see a bias in the proposed moderators in the proposed moderated newsgroup.

But, moderators are generally there to keep the junk out of the newsgroup, not to edit content. They aren't there to evaluate what is being said, they are there to determine whether the post is off-topic and/or will cause problems in the newsgroup.

It would take a pretty incapable person to not be able to tell the difference between what was on-topic and what doesn't belong. We are talking about a pretty clear divide. ANd even borderline posts, it doesn't require High Learning to decide, it requires judgement.

I'm not convinced that the moderators for this proposed newsgroup actually need to be hams. Some guy walking in off the street is just as capable as making most of those judgements as anyone else. The caveat being that their unfamiliarity with the hobby might make them let things slip through, when they didn't know the difference between amateur radio and CB or something else. But even then, that's not tied to needing a piece of paper, it's tied to whether someone is familiar enough with the hobby.

I would argue that there is a bias in even making an analogy to higher learning. Because there is something about the tone of all this proposed newsgroup that sure seems to place it in academia, and I'm not convinced that is a good thing.

When ARRL, W5YI, and AMECO put their cover page on it... or provide

There I agree with you 100%. The vulgarity and sheer non-sense makes me embarrassed for them. I cringe at the mental state they must exist in to wish to provide such a display in front of women and younger users here.

I fear that this does not just exist in the newsgroups, here with us, but also is becoming "something bad" in America :(

I can only admire you in finding the tools and having the determination to be here with us in spite of all that non-sense ...

What part of "LIAR" don't you understand, I don't believe I have miniced my words when it comes to "Paul W. Schleck."

The man has NO credibility with me, he could stand next to my representative in congress and I could not tell them apart--smooth liars are that way.

I think he would brow beat the new licensees who pass a no code exam, I think he supports henchmen would would do this also. I think past posts can be dug up to support that rather nicely! I think the man is all about a world where "EXTRAS RULE" the school yard!

Yes, there is "prejudice" and it has been there a long, long time, I kinda of like the ncts though (no code techs.) I think they may be individuals who have no talent for code, are busy supporting a family and use more of their time paying bills and medical expenses, more than anything else--yes, paul and his bunch call them names ...

And, yes, EXTRA class license holders tend to think of that paper as a doctor degree--but, a doctorate degree in what, a darn hobby? It isn't ...

Look, hot ham, let us put this in perspective, if Paul was my next door neighbor, we might have a cup of coffee in the morning and a beer in the evening over the fence. I might like the PERSON of Paul W. Schleck--I certainly consider him no monster. Here, I only refute his ideas, conceptions, constructs, methods and goals. I hold the man Paul away from his tactics--it is his tactics I have the bone to pick with here.

You comments are greatly appreciated, valid and a good example of how discussion should happen here--thanks!

I believe I was the first one here to point out the limitations of copyright laws, and how Disney paid certain representatives of ours to lengthen these laws to protect works which were still generating substantial income ...

Google is publishing many works which are expired as is the gutenberg project ...

But, in a nutshell, that rule above, you state, is a good "rule of thumb."

Dee:

I forgot to mention, many works had expired their copyrights BEFORE the representatives were paid off to lengthen that law--those works STILL remain un-copyrighted. So, in effect, each older work has to be researched to make a copyright determination--just another layer of difficulty in an already difficult world ...

I'm willing to give him and his group of moderators a chance.

Why aren't you?

> My gawd, the man is so crooked he makes my dogs hind legs look straight!

Exactly how is he "crooked"?

And just to give a complete picture:

Paul has been a No Code Test advocate for many years. I have been a Pro Code Test advocate for many years. Yet we are both willing to read each other's postings without personal attacks.

I know some of the folks in the group of moderators. They are all across the range of opinion on various subjects. I agree with some and disagree with others.

The big question is this:

To my knowledge, there has never been a moderated amateur radio newsgroup on Usenet. So this project is something completely new, progressive and different. We're supposed to support such things, aren't we?

If someone is really interested in discussing amateur radio issues, why would they not give the new, progressive and different newsgroup a chance, without prejudging the result before it begins?

Perhaps the problem some folks have is that they know they won't be able to post unsubstantiated claims or ad hominem attacks - and that just takes out all the fun for them.

N2EY:

Don't let this be a shock to you, I thought of you specifically when I constructed that text.

Paul is slick, he is prejudiced, he thinks the extras are the best captains for this ship. Well, we have decades of their piloting to look at, I am not happy with their steerage.

Moderation is hardly an open forum, it can easily be abused. I, even if I alone, believe Paul is NOT the man to provide leadership. I do not believe him to be either "fair" nor "just."

Why? Because Paul does possess a VERY strong personality. This is NOT bad in and of itself. But, if abused, it is. I am claiming he has demonstrated his abuse and that only members of this group, at large, can rein him in.

As I directly have stated, I fear Paul only seeks a "good ole' boys club" composed of ego stroking extras, what part of that don't you understand? Are you asking me to dig up old posts are re-post them to make my point un-undeniably clear?

There might be a few posts from you I would like to include also ... I fear Pauls' strong personality has had a "crowd control" effect upon your tendencies also, and even you have fallen prey to the "mass-hysteria-of-the-EXTRAS" ...

I would agree that the moderators only really need to be people of good judgment. None of us really object to off-topic posts to any great degree.
What is objectionable is that there are several people who seem to feel a need to stoop to name calling, profanity, vulgarity, ad hominem attacks and so on rather than indulge in the simple pleasure of debate.

You will notice that the most vehement of those opposing the moderated news group are those that have the worst behavior. It seems that all they really want is to insure that they have targets to continue their tactics.

Of course we could just filter them but every few days you have to add another as they keep coming up with new IDs. My killfile is huge these days.

Sufficient data already exists on the poison content of rattlesnakes. In addition, don't lump all snakes with rattlesnakes. The common garter snake is quite harmless.

In addition, the rattlesnake forms a useful role in keeping rodents and other small vermin under control.

Sensible people leave them alone and make sure that the snakes don't come into their immediate area.

fuuny I guess you have not been reading the posts of some of them to this NG

One of felt it was On Topic to enage in MAKING statement that a poster was was insane due to his sexual orientation dispite knowing and posting about how the APA disagrees

another clearly felt it a shock to suggest that the Techs in general might be developing a different and valid view of the ARS based the samples I have subitmeted (at their request and been banned from further exploration of that system for my trouble BTW

it spears they intend SERIOUS editiorail control

it is a GOOD if you want to propate the Status quo that the pronetns seem to think the NEW NG is a Good thing it leads a thinking man to question if it is not designed conously or not to acheive that end

No Mark. It is a fact that you are a functional moron. And it is true that will most likely never change. No lies at all. Cowardice? Not hardly. Lack of stupidity, certainly. I don't want you to know who I am. It's simply none of your business and serves no purpose for me to tell you. You are the moron that chose to expose your deviant lifestyle here, and I choose to keep my normal hetero lifestyle to myself. I don't like weirdo's, and certainly don't want to associate myself with them. Are you starting to understand now? If not, break this down into individual words and reread them slowly. Hell, even sound them out phonetically if need be. Surely it will start to sink in after a few tries.

BTW, had any beer enemas lately? I prefer to drink Michelob Ultra. Have you tried it? They have a dark/amber also. I don't know if that would be of more help to you.

I can fathom at least part of it I find interesting that Einstien and I do both suffer from/are gifted with dyslexia and some of it fellow travelers in what are LD's today because they do not fit well in our educational system

I can understand and fathom what of his materail I can read (and I have once gotten to read some of hand written stuff a truely taxing task with the depth of his dyslexia I can assure you, they are hand written and in some way worse in spelling and conventcail gramuar than much of my own writting

indeed reading his work is one of things that convince me that the ability to spell is highly over rated esp by many posters here working through what he says gives an understand quite impossible in the polished drafted and somehwant flatened nature of his published work

indeed reading einstain in few photocopies peiece of his original text is one of the reason i refuse to polish my own work further I suspect the reaction I get is in part due to the fact that in having to work for it they reader is getting my thoiought at a deeper and more distrubing level

which is exactly what I want and likely something that would be banned by Pual et al

I can't lead on to futher explorations in that feild which is why I moves from Physics to Geologigy and govt work hoesently in part the resaon I suspect goes back the origin of this thread. she an extra and she choose at one to speak to me with amnne

r I see as condesention becuase it is paralled the manne r of the rest with staements like "lessor Classes" and demanding that she not I had a right ro decide how I took something she reminds of an english not my favorite class of being as I suspect you can understand and I feel she has internalized some the attitudes that many techs like myself feel about the extra class which is one of the reasons O brought the issue of class in the first place in the discussion in the first place

I do particpate in something worthwhile here,but I do need to deal with the terrain as it lies by carefully choosing when to and how to feed the trolls and which trolls I feed I feel I have slowly imporved the level of the NG indeed since I began responding we have a drop off in the rash accuassation of child rape for example the trolls wants a reward in feeding what I choose I feel I have improved the tone of the Ng and played the trolls as well

Maybe I am wrong JS but I owe myself the respect of considering my OWN

Now is the time to look at what common goals we can share. What benefits and what detracts from amateur radio. Now is the time for truth and logical discussion. Now is the time to allow people to re-think past thinking and behaviors ...

And, yes, now is the time to forgive. None of us, including myself, have been perfect ...

Let us rethink our past behaviors and band together to chase out forces who would still work to lead us astray. Let what has gone before, be no more.

Then use that judgment well.

I would like to see a "shake out" occur here. Build a fence with those of good will and nature towards amateur radio on one side and "all the others" on the other side, be careful which side you end up standing on, I'd rather have you on the right side ...

Yes, they did. But their old clunker had thrown a rod the last trip we made to Houston and they thought it might happen again. My Mother (God rest her soul) harped at me about breaking down for the entire six hour round trip. She wasn't proud that I passed - she just asked if I scored 100. I wonder how many hams rode to the FCC office in a vehicle that was manufactured before they were born? :-)

My parents made me pay for my ham rig out of my grocery store earnings before they would take me to get my license. That was my test of seriousness. I already had an S-53, a Globetrotter, and a 40m dipole before I took my Novice exam. After I received my license, I couldn't get the Globetrotter to load so I traded it in on a Globe Scout. All the Globetrotter had for an output was a link coupling wound on the final tank coil. Thank goodness, the Globe Scout had an adjustable pi-net output. :-)

I bought my ham gear on time payments and was making 50 cents an hour at the time working on Saturdays. Can you imagine an out-of-state company trusting a 14 year old teenager on a time payment contract nowadays with no co-signer?

My gawd man, I wonder what it took to build character like you have demonstrated. Some of that might have killed me (that might not all be a joke either.)

Good job man. Well done. I'd imagine your mother and father were damn proud of you, whether they were ever able to state such or not ... my own story would pale in comparison :(

Show me how he is "slick" and "prejudiced".

The part where you claim to know how the group will turn out before it even starts.

Yes. If Paul is as "slick" and "prejudiced" as you claim, that should be easy to show from his old postings.

Best way to show that is to provide direct links to the Google archives.

What does that mean, exactly? It sounds a little like a form of ad hominem attack, in which being an Extra somehow disqualifies someone from being objective.

What discussions do you want to have that you think would not be allowed in a moderated group?

You either choose to be part of the problem, or you will choose to be part of the solution ...

Master's degrees are acceptable for a lot of university not acceptable.

So is a discussion on the nature of the quantum structure of empty space on-topic for an antenna group?

I agree to a point.

I would also add that they should be knowledgeable about the subject, and willing to require proof of claims made by posters.

For example, some time back, it was posted here that all amateurs whose licenses were expired but in the grace period could continue to operate.
The reality is that such operation is a violation of FCC rules unless
the licensee has filed for renewal.

Someone who is not familiar with the rules might accept that mistake as fact,
and allow it to be posted unchallenged. Not a good thing.

I am convinced that, for some the "pleasure of debate" consists almost entirely of those attacks.

I suspect you attempt to wear me out, when you pick apart the longest posts and stretch them to eternity.

Let us cut to the chase, do you support making "the committee" (moderators) for the moderated group out of a balanced range of licenses, thoughts, ideas and "styles." Do you support ONLY banning posts which are crude, vulgar and are only based on a personal attack? Do you support allowing a "bit" of off-topic posts if they help support and shore up the goodwill of amateurs, acting together? Do you support stopping ANY strong personality or personalities from gaining control and dominating a moderated group with control and dictator tactics? Do you oppose allowing EXTRAS to be "lord" over the "peasants" of amateur radio? Do you accept no code amateurs are just as deserving of the right to use the public airwaves as any other?

Now, if you say NO to any of the above, we have a problem of disagreement. If not we are in TOTAL agreement ...

Too bad too, I have met a lot of Masters I would like to work with, more so than the disagreeable doctorate they hired :(

That is why Paul's proposed moderated group will fall flat on its face within six weeks of going on line. The man is a self-centered blowhard.

No Mark. It is a fact that you are a functional moron. And it is true that will most likely never change. No lies at all. Cowardice? Not hardly. Lack of stupidity, certainly. I don't want you to know who I am. It's simply none of your business and serves no purpose for me to tell you. You are the moron that chose to expose your deviant lifestyle here, and I choose to keep my normal hetero lifestyle to myself. I don't like weirdo's, and certainly don't want to associate myself with them. Are you starting to understand now? If not, break this down into individual words and reread them slowly. Hell, even sound them out phonetically if need be. Surely it will start to sink in after a few tries.

BTW, had any beer enemas lately? I prefer to drink Michelob Ultra. Have you tried it? They have a dark/amber also. I don't know if that would be of more help to you.

Oh, my. Aren't we all touchy-feely today? Since when is making a statement of fact "wounding the rest of us"? It didn't bother me and, aside from

The stock answer is "That's the ARRL's Job!"

"Just go to the ARRL website and order 'Now You're Talking'!"
The "cod-liver oil" prescription for newbies.

According to what nearly all olde-tymers in here say, they are VEs and "elmer" (teach) newbies "all the time."
Strange, but, according to law, VEs only proctor examinations.
Do they also break the law when "teaching" during testing time?

Now a FEW may actually undertake a personal note to the "enthused." Oddly enough, the contents, phraseology, and general tone is standard boilerplate from, guess who, ARRL.
Believe it or not, I've gotten a couple of those. Just a dozen years ago.

That will be followed by a personal story of "being a teen-ager, collecting bus tokens and shoe leather to walk to the nearest FCC Field Office and tremble before the stern, unforgiving eyes of the FCC Agent while, in flop sweat, they gave PhD-dissertation Answers to "the hardest thing they did in their lives." Then walked back barefoot in the snow, uphill both ways.

Then, to complete the troika, there is the stern admonission to "learn all you can" or "it's the start of a lifetime of learning" or "complete this and your friends and neighbors will come over and admire your (great) intellectual reward." Variations on the above abound but are the essence of the standard singing to a chorus of their peers. [high-fives all around]

In here there is scant mention of radio being "fun" in and of itself. One MUST work DX on HF with CW. Doing less is FAILURE. Then there's the "Work Ethic" on morse code cognition: "One MUST constantly work, work, work to be good, work at it like nothing else in life!" and other assorted locker-room halftime shouting and hollering. "Failure is not an option!" "One MUST MUST MUST know morse!!!" "You aren't a 'good ham' if you don't!"

What of those than can't "get" the code? Shun them! They are worthless beings, unfit to inhabit the same earth as the Mighty Macho Morsemen! "Stupid!" "Can't demonstrate their willingness to "work!"

What of those (like me) who don't CARE to "do code?" Ah, that has been the MMM's quandry. They do NOT know how to handle such people...especially those who were active in REAL radio long before their first license. Their thoughts have always used themselves as role models, being suitably imprinted as teenagers and striving ever since to be professional amateurs! The closest they've come to "handling" such rebellious heathen is to play-act a mother (or, if Catholic, a Nun) and condescendingly admonish a "child" who has misbehaved! [Miccolis' conscious or unconscious manner] "Naughty, naughty, momma spank!" :-(

>So, let us examine the existing threads, do any seem to be active in new >recruitment/licence help? No, you don't see much of that either.

Oh, "that's the job of the ARRL!" Or of religious ministries that send their four-year-olds (who are always genius-precocious and have full adult English comprehension) for "instant" license test completion.

[in 1998]

Mush-minded macho middle-school misfits will always growl (in pubertic tenor tones) "Wassa matta, ya too DUMB ta pass a test?!?" Those are always unidentifiable anony-mousies hiding behind curious handles such as "Cmdr Buzz Corey" (a long-defunct failed TV character from American black-and-white TV of long-ago days). Those can be shined off, of course, but those are likely to have that adolescent atty-tood into well past middle age.

What tickles me are those "personal experiences" during open-to-the-public events like Field Day. By their description civilians "always cluster around hams doing beeping morse, naturally showing an 'interest' in morse code." Ahem, those of the public crowd around the STRANGE, wondering whatinhell it is, and hardly ever give a damn about it later. Amateur morsemen do a LOT of such morse myth manufacturing.

>OK. So, examine them again, see may of these threads engaged in dialog

Well, as you've mentioned, Dee has paid lip service to that, but, much earlier, Hans Brakob said much more about his involvement. Hans quit trying to post in here, noise level way too high. Can't say I blame him. He is now on the MODERATOR list. Woe be unto some of the arrogant, posturing, self-centered self-appointed-gods who have crossed him in the past in here...

Territorial Imperative! Yes, built into the human psyche.

Ya know, CB on "11 meters" was created in 1958. That's 49 years ago and the HATRED of "mere civilians" occupying their precious little sliver of spectrum (largely unused at the time) knew no bounds. Especially so when there was NO CODE TEST of those (bottom-feeding river-slime civlians) to use it! That bigotry remained to rot their souls and for them to pass it on to later generations to rot the souls of those. POSSESSIVENESS! It was "theirs!" Geez.

>Now, why don't we have more "new-blood" here? What, speak up, I can't >seem to hear you?

Well, there was ONE for sure. Val Germann in Missouri.
A darling of Dick Carroll, SK, then W0EX. Germann said
ALL the right code words, worshipped the same code gods, was praised and honored, etc. Carroll was still living when Germann opted out. According to Brian Burke, Germann is still a Technician class, hasn't shown up in here since he bailed.

Here's to "TURF:" May it always be trod. By ANYONE.

sometimes that help takes the shape of not allowing folks to ignore problem festering in our ranks sometime like last night it was in advising a relitively new ham on radios for the preveldges we will gain in few weeks

you know what happened at the last hamfest I atended JS people saw my call on my shirt and knew who I was, the fest was someplace I had NO QSO's in the area thus I can only assume they know me from here or some such

so far shockingly to me all those contacts have been pleasent ones (aftr I get over the shock)

I will disucss radio at anytime I will also defend my ight to be who I am at anytime someone wants to bring it up

according to some I have at least the moral right to do so as I choose according to my Rabbi I have a moral duty to do so

"Tolerance" or "intolerance" develops later. The obvious huge base of ARRL publications will attract most newbies. That and the constant mention of the ARRL by all the olde-tymers.
Newbies haven't yet learned any better.

The FACT of the matter is that the ARRL has failed to garner enough memberships from the largest class: Technician. They acknowledge their existance but do little else, preferring to go to their core membership of olde-tymers, the beepers.

While the above statement cannot be proven by "official" pollsters, they can't be disproven either. A random sampling of opinions is enough to secure that for discussion (except for Cranky Spanky). ARRL is very, very secretive about its membership demographics, won't even reveal total membership but twice a year and then only for QST ad sales purposes.
It does not have to reveal anything since QST has the largest readership number in the USA and is a virtual monopoly on the ad market. Advertisers are what keeps all periodicals afloat...including "membership magazines."

>I am afraid the new crowd will need to come from here ... but hey, that >is only one mans' opinion.

Not at all, John, you be wrong there. ARRL has periodical and publication racks on the floors of HRO and Radio Shack and other stores to catch all eyes. They have ads on websites but very few non-ARRL-produced periodicals having to do with radio-electronics. ARRL depends heavily on olde-tymers who were weaned on the League diamond and may know no other source of amateur radio information. Those olde-tymers are constantly mentioning the League. Word of mouth is always effective and costs the League nothing.

For example, when someone asks for copies of the Question Pools, olde-tymers invariably point to the ARRL. However, the QP can be obtained directly from the folks who generate them at www.ncvec.org. Part 97 of Title 47 C.F.R. can be obtained free and are exact copies of their original printed form, directly from the Government Printing Office website through links at the FCC's website. Olde-tymers will invariably point to the ARRL again as the "source" of federal government information. ARRL "edits" the GPO copyright-free regulations "to be more readable." "More readable?" These old eyes can read GPO Codes of Federal Regulations just fine in their regular form. Part 97 is one of the smaller Parts in Title 47.

Newbies will listen to olde-tymers since they haven't YET learned who are what, hence they will be indoctrinated into the League. That is part of the 'conditioned thinking' that pervades US amateur radio. The ARRL "can do no wrong" is a constant underlining to what nearly all olde-tymers say. "They control the vertical, they control the horizontal" and they have created their own outer limits which none can breach.

But, look at some other things for change. Check www.ncvec.org for the number of VECs in the USA. Only one of them is the ARRL. Look at the recent (last decade) decisions from the FCC on NPRMs...the League doesn't get carte blanche on whatever it wants now...it was once just pro forma to yield to ARRL desires. New, never-before-licensed amateurs are and have been for the last decade, coming more from the no-code-test Technician class route. The ARRL was staunchly pro-code even to just past WRC-03...despite the IARU taking up their stand of having individual countries decide for themselves over a year before WRC-03. Despite all that OPEN INFORMATION, some of the League faithfull refuse to acknowledge all that, giving more rationalizations (incorrect ones at that) than a barrel full of red-hatted monkeys going beep-beep all night long.

The final change will occur in February of this year. If the ARRL wishes to survive with all its "free" services intact, it needs to change with the times. It should NOT treat newbies as little kiddies to be "educated the right way." They MUST learn that their core membership (of elderly beeping gentlemen) cannot last forever. Excuses and myriad rationalizations don't cut it. It WILL be interesting to see what they do.

That's total bullshit pronounced from ignorance of over a decade of BBS activity in the USA prior to the Internet becoming public in 1991. Note: "USENET" is carried ON the Internet...it is NOT some separate, distinct, nor original format venue that grew out of the original ARPANET.

"Moderation" is NOT something "new" in computer-modem communications. It was practiced by Sysops on BBSs over a quarter century ago.

Makes sense. I took both my Novice and General exams in the fall and never even noticed any "big summer push".

Back then the shipping industry was advertising heavily for radio ops and Philly was a big port. The guys taking the commercial tests tended to be on the shaggy side like sailors rather than white-collar types looking for jobs at broadcast stations. I've always thought that somehow this is why I got swamped by 'em when I took my exams

The reasons they cited and the reality of it were probably two different critters. Even back then it was obvious that the FCC was working on getting out of the ham testing biz.

That was during the incentive licensing thrash when the regs changed

There's another example of rapid-fire changes in the regs. When I went for my '77 casllsign swap you submitted a list of the specific calls you would like to have, w3rv was not a sequentially issued callsign.
You had to comb thru the print version of the callbook to find open 1x2 callsigns before submitting your list. PIA. My first choice was w3ru but somebody ahead of me in the line got w3ru so I got my second choice and became w3rv.

I did the trip to Gettysburg with Nick k3nl. A couple years ago he e-mailed me and told me w3ru had just become available and told me to go for it.

Yeah, right. Not hardly!

I disagree with your term "Paul and his bunch." I do not charge Paul Schleck with being anything other than an on-line politician, the type that thinks they know all the answers. That comes largely from:

Past history of Schleck has him ocasionally wanting to get in the thick of a contentious discussion in public and, to some, trying to continue that in private e-mail in an effort to enforce his will on them. Shrug. Not any sort of felonious act.

From a sizeable experience in moderating BBS (Bulletin Board Systems, the precursor to the Internet) public boards, a moderator SHOULD NOT EVER get "involved" publicly in any contentious subject where they side with one group or another. Trying to mix it up in a virtual tag-team match always results in FAILURE TO PROPERLY MODERATE. They are BIASED. The ONLY thing that moderators CAN do EFFECTIVELY is to issue notices, advise on behavior of all.

Moderators should walk softly and silently, carrying a large fire extinguisher. That works.

>And, yes, EXTRA class license holders tend to think of that paper as a

Irrelevant to THIS ENVIRONMENT. This environment is solely composed of words on screens which are variously "colored" by the imaginations of the readers.
Some readers attempt to "interpret the unspoken words" for their own nefarious purposes. MOST readers, I suspect, simply get the GIST of what is written in normal information interchange of in-person communications. However, the amount of interchange is itself limited to the ability of writers to convey their thoughts...there are no clues such as tone of voice nor additional expressions of emotion. Such normal in-person clues must be derived from the gist, the body of the words.

Down here in the entertainment capitol of the world, one encounters ACTORS. Really good actors can have all the appearance of any range between saint and sinner, educated or woefully ignorant. At first one CANNOT distinguish their character from the real person lurking (or hiding) inside. With sufficient dialogue in-person one can begin to discern the person and differentiate them from the character. This usually leads to the discovery that they are supremely driven by EMOTION, not logical reasoning (emotion is the essence of their craft) with high degrees of EGO. It takes ego and chutzpah to get up in front of an audience and be someone entirely different...and be believable as that character.

In computer-modem comms there is a strong analogy to ACTING in that most of the normal in-person clues are missing, nothing of sight or sound, a sort of perception twilight zone where the perceptor's imagination can run wild. Imaginations are triggered by what another writes, how they write it, and the ego-emotional overlay from the gist of the text. The writer may not be aware of the effect of what he/she writes has on readers. Professional wordsmiths and marketing ad copy writers are aware but those are rare in this somewhat homogenous grouping. Most simply write as they have spoken to others for years.

Bottom line is that this medium is part "stage" but the egos and chutzpahs are generally doing the driving. One CANNOT EFFECTIVELY delve into the real personna of the writer without a great deal of message copy to serve as a basis of judgement. That has little to do with their in-person appearance-behavior-identification.

Excuse me, I have to go off and read another "uphill-through-the-snow-both-ways-while-barefoot" tale of vast, heroic, struggle to get their ham license collitch degree. Such realism! We must honor all those who were on the Great March. Sigh.

Is a strict on or off topic message grounds for not being allowed to post? Quantum structure of empty space can be a fascinating direction for a thread to wander into. Have the moderators said they would not allow such a post?

The moderation group effort didn't come about due to that. More like a few posters who have deep seated problems, as well as a willingness to ebomb the group(s). Until I discovered Xnews, I just found this newsgroup not worth the effort to read. Whereas most readers

I would suggest going to the SOURCE of all US Copyright information and protection:

www.copyright.gov

The Copyright Office has a number of quite-clear pages on exactly what a Copyright IS, who is protected, what constitutes a Copyright, etc.

>Basically if the work was published in 1923 or later, there is a potential >for it to be still under copyright. Copyright laws have changed a lot.

Not quite correct. The first major upheaval in US Copyright Law of "modern times" happened with Public Law 94-553 passed on 19 Oct 76.

As of 1 Jan 78, any work created on or after that date was protected for "life plus 50," or the lifetime of the author or corporate entity plus 50 years. This was later amended to "life plus 70" [see PL 105-298]

Any work created BEFORE 1 Jan 78 had a number of different protections, between 28 and 47 years after creation. After the URAA (Uruguay Round Agreements Act) that was amended to 75 years with a possible total of 95 years. To pin those protections down to nit-picky detail would require the aid of a Copyright attorney who must include changes from Public Law 105-298. Legal help is suggested when there is question of a change of ownership of Copyrights, a subject much more convoluted in details.

In essence, by Law, government works CANNOT be copyrighted. A corporate entity (such as the ARRL) CAN copyright their works but there is a very grey area on who owns what when such entities INCLUDE non-copyrightable works such as government regulations.

For the complete regulations on Patents, Trademarks, and Copyrights see Title 37 Code of Federal Regulations available free for download from the US Government Printing Office website.

KH2D for example. I consider him a friend. Most of the hams that I've agreed with and disagreed with on RRAP could be a friend should I ever meet them in person. There are several who I think are dangerous.

Fair enough. Pick away.

I think after all the nicey-nice backslapping on the moderated group, they'll get sick of hearing the same-o, same-o from their cloned

It was when school was out and all us younguns could go downtown and take the exams.
With good timing, three times in a summer.

When I went for the 13 wpm code (summer 1968), there were several groups of four or five of us at the code table. When I went back in 1970 for the 20 wpm and the Extra written, I was the only one there for that speed.

Sounds reasonable! Also, the office did code tests only two times a week (Tuesday was written-only day) and so you ran into them each time.

They went back and forth. In 1951 they restructured the licenses in a way that would generate a lot more testing - then in 1953 they gave all operating privileges to Generals and above. In '64 they virtually eliminated the Conditional and did the incentive licensing thing, almost guaranteeing a lot more work for themselves.

Yup. In 76 or 77 they opened up the N prefixes, and I got the 129th one in 2 land. By 1979 they had announced that they would not reassign 1x2 calls - if I gave up N2EY, nobody else would get it. So I kept it.

Once they all agree how disadvantaged they were and yet somehow overcame unsurmountable odds in gaining an amateur license; how Morse Code/CW is the only true mode in amateur radio, and how unworthy the new hams are, they'll tire of being in complete agreement with each other. All very boring stuff once you're heard it for the ten thousandth time.

Then they'll show up again on RRAP as has Larry tRoll, Mad Mike Deignan, Mike Coslo, and Steven Robesin for a little real discussion.

Not at my news server. My newsreader just killed 54 posts on entering this newsgroup, even though I had been here earlier this morning. In addition to Mark Morgan and K4YZ, I've also added John Smith and all followups to his posts. That caught some people who aren't jerks, but I don't want to see any posts which might contain the John Smith material as quotes. I also kill all followups to any Mark Morgan posts for the same reason.

Anything crossposted to unrelated newsgroups like a.u.k. is killed, but it's almost 99% certain that those ARE jerks.

The newsreader doesn't show me the titles of the killed posts; it just makes them disappear. The count of killed posts is displayed at the bottom of the screen as I open the newsgroup.

My point is that around 100 posts per day are killed, posts which would never have shown up in a moderated newsgroup in the first place. Just so long as there are people making that kind of post, the argument in favor of creating a moderated group will have those posts to use as a supporting statistic.

I'd like to thank the jerks for unwittingly helping us out.

The FCC or the VE creating the tests likely wanted to test for knowledge to be sure that hams at those times knew enough to avoid common mistakes of those days. Being just outside the band may have been a common error back in the 50's.

I can't remember the last time the FCC busted a ham for a purely technical problem. One that required more of the ham to report to the FCC via mail that he had taken the defective transmitter out of service and was going to have an Elmer help him fix it.

The www.copyright.gov website will clear that up on OLD copyrights.

Once 1978 was reached there was "life plus 50."
Now, just WHO is going to renew such things other than corporate entities? :-) Now it is "life plus 70."

Arguing matters over a 1938 copyright in the year 2007 is rather like "how many angels dance on the head of a pin?" :-)

> Individuals/corps make a living though such "questionable practices."

J. K. Lasser's "Your Income Tax" came out on news-stands faithfully during year-end holiday time in the USA. For many years. Had ALL the IRS forms in it.
NOT a "questionable practice." Quicken does the same thing but goes through all the decision diamonds and the math to fil them in. No charge for duping the fed forms. Enormous work in programming the thing.

BTW, J.K. was the father of actress Louise Lasser.

Government works are NOT copyrightable. By law.

I've downloaded (for free) lots of old textbooks, mostly TMs but reproed hard-covers from different Internet sites. Those are out-of-date now (for their material) but are useful for nostalgia purposes or just to cross-check where some of the slightly-later theory things came from. Many folks have been very busy copying all those (all pages included, even blank ones), putting them together to upload for others.

I'm not going to get in ten kinds of snit to forever argue the "legality" of such repros. Such arguments are done by LITTLE people trying to be "big" barracks lawyers. If someone goes to a lot of trouble to do the copying and collating and uploading, take advantage of it. It is NOT some grande felony matter such as pirating a copy of "Pirates of the Carribean" DVD or the latest "hit diva" wailing into a microphone for a 2007 platinum CD issue.

The ultimate in such copying was the enormous job a group had in cleaning up an R-390 receiver TM. Quite legal. But, they not only cleaned up the schematics and graphics, they RETYPED the text and many tables! Terribly neat, easy to read TM was the result. Of interest only to boatanchor collectors, not the collectors of pre-1950 Study Guides. Sheesh.

However, some regard old ARRL publications as religious icons. Nothing logical could be said about them.

Its my conclusion, years ago, that many posters in this forum are not interested in things like "facts" when those facts contridict their own little perceptions of reality, hatred of amateur extras, hatred of the ARRL, etc.

I suspect that if the moderators consisted of Len Anderson, Brian Burke, and Mark Morgan, the newsgroup would be perfectly fair and equitable to all viewpoints, right? I'm sure there would be a good balance of postings, including posts from Extra-class operators and ARRL members.

HA HA ...

No, but if Len were but one of the moderators, might not be so bad ...

The bad blood between some here really is childish, hard to tell what is going to finally get them to settle down and begin acting like gentlemen again, but, has been going on far too long ...

With the focus of this group being forced away from "code/no code" we should be able to search out some common ground. I think bringing out the welcome wagon for new licensees would be a good idea.

Some of that alright ...

However, look at the REAL problem. For decades now the extras (and wannabe generals) have pulled ARRL strings (and the reverse, self-cycling really) to control amateur radio and steer the course.
Those were and are PUBLIC airwaves they grabbed. Joe Blow Public was unconcerned--they got away with it.

Now we set here in the PUBLIC NEWSGROUPS. They attempt to re-implement the old strategy and find it is not working. Those USENET GODS are on to them, they see though their thinly veiled text and to their hearts.
Those USENET GODS insist public newsgroups are PUBLIC ...

... end of story.

I agree but only part way. Schleck's explanations word it as if there was "never" any moderator activity anywhere else and his Usenet-Internet group is the "only" group that can handle it.

That is, to put it most delicately, utter cow-flop. The BBSs were beginning to go national in networking in the early 1980s and hundreds of BBS Sysops were having to MODERATE thousands of users and subscribers. Their executive (main computer) software was already designed with Moderator's Controls to effect that moderation. I was there. I saw it. I used it.
I've even talked to two different BBS software writer-designers. I've been a moderator on three different BBSs.

Apparently that doesn't "count." <quizical look> Not of academia (despite having macadmias) I am brushed aside.

It SEEMS to be the usual academic NIT syndrome. It SEEMS like only THEY (the academics) have the "smarts" to do it.
The usual brush-aside is mentioning USENET out of ARPANET, supposedly all academic institutions. Actually no, both involved BOTH academia and corporations involved in defense work as well as instrumentation makers. Tsk, I was there on ARPANET for a short while, on USENET for a short while.
Be damned if I ever saw any "moderation" on either many years ago. :-(

By example of early DeJaVu archives (now Google's), Jim Kehler was, in my honest opinion, one of the WORST of the sarcastic, arrogant, in-your-face sort in his postings to me. I'm sorry if that bothers you, Brian, but this target of his frustrations and sarcasm didn't much like him. I classify Cranky Spanky as a junior grade sissy version of Kehler. Too bad Cranky was never stuck on Cranky has ever taken up golf? :-) HAR! Beautiful, Brian. :-)

They will find, after a while, that their little clubhouse elite is a very small place after all. Claustrophobia will set in or they will get drunk on their own high-fives.
Or, they might bail to other places like eham.net and make out like they single-handedly worked stations side by side with Maxim or Marconi doing "pioneering" adventures in radio...that none of them could possibly have done.

Your impression of Paul is completely wrong. He is singlehandedly responsible for the creation of the entire rec.radio hierarchy. He wrote the charters, solicited the calls for discussions and calls for votes for each and every rr ng.

It was either Paul or Brian who wrote the Usenet software that's

The first half of the Incentive Licensing changes was implemented in November 1968; the second half went into effect in November 1969. There was, of course, some grumbling. Some of those doing the grumbling decided that they'd be happy with General Class privileges. Some took the Advanced exam which had no additional Morse Code test. Some went all the way to the Extra. There were others who didn't grumble and simply passed the additional exams.

Under the current laws there is no renewal. The max copyright length applies automatically. The renewal requirement was dropped a long time ago.
Anything that fell out of copyright (i.e. was not renewed) before that change occurred went into the public domain and stayed there (there are a few exceptions but it gets too complicated). Those that were still under copyright at the time of the change had their copyrights automatically extended to the max length.

Yes, It would be bad. Len can't control his behavior. Ten years of his archived newsgroup posts exists to back up my statement.

There's one reason that Len wouldn't make a good moderator.

No sweat. I can do it. Have done it. Problem is that I could hardly post a thing. To be effective, moderators CANNOT get into the thick of a contentious subject.

> The bad blood between some here really is childish, hard to tell what is > going to finally get them to settle down and begin acting like gentlemen > again, but, has been going on far too long ...

That's true. But, these olde-tymers have "had their way" as "superiors" that I doubt (sincerely) that they could stop.

> With the focus of this group being forced away from "code/no code" we > should be able to search out some common ground. I think bringing out > the welcome wagon for new licensees would be a good idea.

Yes, but the "welcomes" would STILL be out of the ARRL hymn book, unchanged.

You forget that so many hams are so into THEIR thing that they've seldom reached out of their own experiences to imagine How To Do It with total strangers.

For example, that hoary old schtick "Talk anywhere else in the world on your own radio!" with a ham license.
While true, the ionosphere is not open 24/7 and folks in far lands aren't keeping the same time as any in the 7 time zones of the USA. A little handheld cell phone can do it, no sweat. Co$t? Much less than a fraction of a ham station, antenna, cost and the nasty looks from spouse or family on wasting time with ham radio.

"Learn a lifelong <whatever>?" Possibly for a teen-ager.
For Mr/Ms Ordinary Other Job Skill probably NOT.
One thing all these "I-learned-it-as-a-teenager" extras forget that there isn't any set "requirement" to do it that way. Since they kept harping on the "no age limit" thing they've totally forgotten that it works the OTHER way on the "age spectrum."

When you boil everything down to a slow simmer you won't find ANY of these lofty radiomen interested in helping others, only themselves. Everything from collecting Titles and Certificates to Club Calls for clubs that don't exist.

They won't step out of their Personal-Interest area to see how other groups do it, won't acknowledge other groups surviving, and think the world of reality is still the same as when they were young long ago.

I don't know the "answers" to getting anyone involved.
I can - dispassionately - tell them what the amateur radio service is supposed to be. I would rather tell them about the wonderful opportunities in engineering or many other technologically-oriented occupations.
It's NOT my job to "tell" these lofty "superior" amateurs how to do it. If they were so damn "superior" they would already KNOW. <shrug>

Nope.

The Conditional distance changed from 75 to 175 miles on April 15, 1965. The changes known as "incentive licensing" did not become effective until November 22, 1968 - more than three and a half years later. The growth stoppage was noted in 1965. So it seems very unlikely that those changes had any effect.

There were other factors besides the Conditional distance change, IMHO. For example, one of the main sources of new hams used to be SWLs and others who would hear hams using 'phone on their "shortwave" receivers, and would want to join the fun. But by 1964, SSB had become the most popular HF 'phone mode, and SSB was unintelligible on most SWL receivers.

Another factor was the rise of the "counterculture" among young people, who had fed the growth of ham radio all through the 1950s. Ham radio was considered too "square" by many of them, too allied with the military-industrial complex.

> It's said > that hams were less than happy about having to upgrade to get back > frequencies they had the use of before.

Some were unhappy. Others simply took on the challenge and upgraded.
But those changes took place more than 3-1/2 years after the Conditional distance changed.

And here's the kicker:

The "incentive licensing" restrictions took place in two stages, on November 22, 1968 and November 22, 1969.

During the 1970s, the number of US hams grew much faster than they did in the 1960s. By 1979 there were at least 350,000 US hams.

QST de W1AW
ARRL Bulletin 6 ARLB006
>From ARRL Headquarters
Newington CT January 26, 2007
To all radio amateurs

SB QST ARL ARLB006
ARLB006 ARRL Board accepts National Emergency Response Planning Committee report

The ARRL Board of Directors accepted the Report of the National Emergency Response Planning Committee (NERPC) when it met January 19 and 20 in Windsor, Connecticut. Upon dissolving the committee with its thanks, the Board set in motion a process to identify and implement action items in the report as soon as possible. ARRL First Vice President Kay Craigie, N3KN, chaired the 13-member NERPC, charged with developing comprehensive recommendations to improve the League's response to regional, national and international disasters. Among other things, panel members evaluated the responses and actions of ARRL and the Amateur Radio Emergency Service (ARES) during Hurricane Katrina as well as lessons learned.

"If 'lessons learned' are not followed by 'behaviors changed,' then the lessons have not been learned at all," the report concludes. The report describes disaster preparedness as "a moving target, moving faster all the time." No recommendations, plans or systems should be considered "the permanent answers for all circumstances and hazards," the report asserts.

The unprecedented scope of the Katrina response placed ARRL Headquarters into a leadership coordination role through national-level requests for help from served agencies such as the American Red Cross. While the level of expertise in emergency communications and emergency management among US radio amateurs is growing, the report noted, so is the expectation that the ARRL provide first-rate leadership and guidance.

Among the report's wide-ranging recommendations and suggestions:

* enhance ARRL and ARES training in basic message handling.

* develop a continuing education course covering installation, configuration, and use of Winlink 2000 for e-mail.

* formally establish a national ARES volunteer database for use during major disasters and establish training criteria.

* institute a Major Disaster Emergency Coordinator (MDEC) function to coordinate responses to large-scale national or regional disasters or emergencies.

* become better acquainted with the emergency response needs of distant ARRL sections, such as Pacific, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands and Alaska.

* improve working relationships with national-level served agencies.

* ensure ARRL staff training in the Incident Command System (ICS) and National Incident Management System (NIMS) and, as necessary, adapt ARRL's emergency response structure to the Unified Command model.

In addition, ARRL President Joel Harrison, W5ZN, has appointed an ad hoc committee to study issues relating to background investigations as they apply to ARRL Amateur Radio volunteers and to recommend a background investigation policy.

I'm disturbed that there was little or no discussion, and suddenly we have a "solution," complete with with a list of moderators that no one has ever heard of, nevermind that they are all Extras.

He couldn't have handled the pileups.

"They" built a big golf course on Guam. Seems it is cheaper to fly to Guam for a weekend of golf than to pay greens fees in Japan.

Anyway, they needed a lot of sand for the constructions, and brought a barge load of it from China. Welp, in China, any flowing water is considered a mechanism of taking care of waste. The sand they dredged was full of e-coli, and this was deposited over our freshwater well...

Would you put that question in an Amateur Radio test today?

Wow, is this going to degenreate into how much easier people have it today since we can use calculators? I can use a calculator, I can do longhand, I can even do a sliderule - ours was the last class in school that had to learn to use them.

Would seem like it. But while I could likely do the math from the question, I don't know that much about crystals that maybe there was something else that the student needed to know. to get a correct answer.

Frankly, I don't see much of a difference. If I know that the remight be a question regarding temp cofficient of quartz crystals on teh test, I'd learn about them.

Good, glad they were caught. One of the interesting things about people when they get to be curmudgeons is that they use present day exposures and punishments as some sort of evidence of corruption as compared with the good old days, when there was apparently no corruption because there wasn't any expose's of the wicked. Your argumen could be used as saying that there was no steroid abuse in baseball before the first person was caught....

Jim, You are exxpressing an opinion. That you choos to describe your opinion as accurate, then I guess it follows that you think (know) that my opinion on the matter is innacurate.

Innacurate is a present day euphemism for lying.

I would hope that you are not accusing me of lying when I'm simply offering my opinion.

Not to the extent that aging men do.

I dont' know if upset is hte correct word. He's having his version of fun with you folks that want to argue with him. Kind of a co-dependency thing. ;^)

Even if the parents don't support the child's wish to learn the hobby, the situation isn't permanent. The young 'un can graduate, move out of

I once went to a Pirates game at old Forbes Field at some point in the 60's. I think it took something over 3 hours. NOw it takes something around 2.5 hours. Oddly enough, the best way isn't by interstate, but nasty old route 22.

Hard to say. The mid sixties were a period of interesting social change. Amateurs might have been considerd part of the "establishment. I was kinda young at that point, so I could only hazard a guess.

Perhaps some information could be picked up from what happened when the travel rules went away?

Fortunately I got my radio's as presents. I did however, want to join a band. They bought me a guitar, but after that I was on my own. I bought a guitar amp and a PA amp, and was making payments while awfully young too. But then again, I was making between 100 to 200 dollars a week while in high school in the late 60's early seventies. That was some serious jack at the time for a kid!

I think you should quit, anonymous John. Which general--Wesley Clark?

You seem to see some conspiracy in the creation of the moderated newsgroup. There are other moderated newsgroups which work quite well. There are a number of moderated e-mail reflectors which works quite well. No one who behaves as Len Anderson is permitted to post to the topband reflector, the Ten-Tec reflector, The Butternut antenna reflector or the DX reflector. No Mark Morgans issue countless "Wogger on rrapage" posts. No Roger Wisemans foul the reflectors with demented filth.

As soon as one of Len's tirades veered off course into an anti-ARRL rant, filled with "tsk, tsk" and "poor baby", his post would be dumped. His "Spanky Spanky", "Herr Oberst", "Sister Nun of the Above" and the like would get him banned in short order. He'd have to behave or he'd be given the boot.

It really is that simple.

Back in 1999, I spent a week or so coordinating commumications between E-Com (AKA 911) the National Guard, and the American Red Cross taking people to shelters during an ice storm and major power outage. Nothing has upgraded around here since then to allow the different agencies to communicate if cell phones went out, so I'd be ready to do it again. Not all of us live in the big cities and based on what I've seen critiqued, they aren't much better than those of us out in the sticks when it comes to interagency communications.

And this benefited the ARS in which way. If someone knows the task...they know the task. To be honest with you, I've known some CB'ers who knew as much or more about radio than ham's. However, I've not known any CB'ers since about 1974 or so.

Well then, anyone with less than a general would be a good candidate for support to "Joe Blow Ham." Well, as long as they weren't a good ole' buddy of the "evil extras."

Maybe one extra, one general, one tech, etc. Can't see how that would look "stacked", long as they demonstrated they weren't all "good ole' buddies."

Many ways really, only one not acceptable really ... extra, extra read all about it ...

Alas, the only software that's used regularly on Usenet that I had a hand in was auto-faq:

http://www.novia.net/~pschleck/auto-faq/

Though Brian did have a big hand in the early history of the Info-Hams

You've introduced another of your factual errors, Leonard.
Barring a solar flare, it is quite possible for me to talk to radio amateurs in other parts of the world around the clock if I have some knowledge of propagation and of sunrise/sunset times. I can work the Japanese, Asiatic Russians, Australians, New Zealanders and the like on 160, 80 and 40 meters near my sunrise. I can work Europe, the Middle East and Africa during my morning and afternoon hours on at least one of the bands 10/12/15/17/20m. Near my sunset I can work the Europeans, Middle East and Africa on 30, 40, 80 or 160m.

I would have thought that a man with your expertise would have known these things.

Does it cost less? Start calling folks in Japan and Australia. See those minutes add up. Do you think you'd get funny looks from your spouse or family if you told them that you were just calling a series of overseas friends every day for a chat?

It is difficult to make out just what you mean, Len. What works what OTHER way on the "age spectrum"? Do you mean that there is an upper age limit? Do you mean that old folks have other things to do? Do you mean that amateur radio wouldn't be lifelong for an old person?

Excuse me, Leonard. I hate to interrupt spirited soapbox oratory, but I don't understand what when you write "to see how other groups do it" and "won't acknowledge other groups surviving".

I'm under no misunderstanding that today's world is the exactly the same as it was when I grew up. Some things don't change. There are parents and children and family budgets and competing areas of interest.

No, not a conspiracy in terms of "gov't. conspiracy." Just normal "human conspiracy", like when the republicans oppose the democrats and the reverse, and they get together and put together a "game plan." Just dirty little street smart tricks and tactics to get ones wishes put over on another. Like when you call up a friend and get him to help and/or support what you wish to accomplish, or join a group or club which supports your interests, or join a lobbying group, etc.

You know, exactly what Mr. Schleck is so good at, why I call him "political", why I refer to those aiding him in his "game plan", the henchmen. You know, like stacking the deck with all extras which are in agreement with him and have egos equal his size.

Ban Len, you mentioned banning Len in your post I am responding to? Well yes, that is "part of the game plan" I would imagine, and anyone else not falling into the moderated plan.

Yes, that is what they EXACTLY have in mind, take a public newsgroup and turn it into a "good ole' boys club."

Well, if that is what they want, let them engage in a private forum which is available on the internet. You know, they can set up a room for themselves on an instant messenger. They can create a private chat room on IRC. Hell, they can set up a private email list and sit there.

Why confuse a public newsgroup with a private chat room or private instant messenger chat room.

Naaa, that "Military Conspiracy" stuff is all theirs. That is why they have to run things they way they are attempting ...

Not really trying to change the subject, but I went to the local bookstore and two Radio Shacks trying to get a copy of the General Class Study manual. Both Radio Shacks said that they no longer carry the study guides. So, I opted to download the questions and answers from the net for free and give that a shot.

Did two Radio Shack managers lie to me? Has anyone seen the ARRL study guides? I didn't even see any of the "Now Your's Talking" books at the local stores.

You suspect wrong, John. I'm just looking for information.

Besides, with 174 postings to rrap so far this month, I don't think I could wear you out by simply asking some questions.
> Let us cut to the chase, do you support making "the committee"

Depends on what is meant by "balanced". Does it mean that there must be a certain number from each license class, with the standards lowered for some and raised for others to make sure that numerical "balance" is achieved no matter what?

> Do you support ONLY banning > posts which are crude, vulgar and are only based on a personal attack?

I support blocking posts which are crude, or vulgar, or which contain personal attacks, or which contain clear uncorrected factual errors, or which are so off-topic as to have no clear connection to amateur radio. Off-topic blocking should be used sparingly, because IMHO in most cases some sort of connection to amateur radio can be made.

> Do you support allowing a "bit" of off-topic posts if they help support

Yes!

> Do you support

Depends on what you mean by "strong personality".

> Do

I don't need to oppose what doesn't happen.

> Do you accept no code amateurs are just as deserving of the > right to use the public airwaves as any other?

I consider all amateurs who have passed the required tests and who have clean records to be equally deserving to use the privileges granted by their licenses.

Or, to put it another way: Any licensed radio amateur who plays by the rules and good operating practice is a "real ham" in my book, regardless of license class, vintage of tests passed, modes or bands used, age, gender, etc.

I haven't yet seen an FCC-issued amateur radio license with the term
"no code" on it. All FCC-licensed amateurs are allowed to use Morse Code. Some have passed test(s) on it, some haven't, that's all.
> Now, if you say NO to any of the above, we have a problem of > disagreement. If not we are in TOTAL agreement ...

Whatever.

But the big question is this: You have described Paul Schleck as "slick" and "prejudiced" without any proof other than your opinion.

You have claimed that "he has demonstrated his abuse and that only members of this group, at large, can rein him in."

You have stated: "Are you asking me to dig up old posts are re-post them to make my point un-undeniably clear?"

and

"There might be a few posts from you I would like to include also ..."

To which I again reply: "Show me".

If Paul is as you say, then it should be a simple matter to show me
the evidence from his postings to Usenet. You made the claims, but now you're not backing them up.

This isn't a "DEMAND". It's just a request. But if you want me to accept your claims about another person, you need to provide me with evidence, not just unsupported statements.

Why should I prejudge what Paul & Co. will do without even giving him and his bunch a chance? It's not like his moderated group would replace any existing group.

What discussions about amateur radio do you want to have that you think would not be allowed in a moderated group?

Radio Shack has basically gotten out of amateur radio. I haven't seen any study guides there for a couple of years. Sometimes you can get them at Barnes & Noble but you have to special order. In that case one might as well order directly off the ARRL website.

The Technician license manual is no longer called "Now You're Talking". I don't recall the new name.

Me either. Radio Shack is pretty much cheaply-made, overpriced consumer electronics these days. I go in there sparingly, it seems every 6 months their focus seems to change. I think the last radio shack I went into had 50-75% of the store's floor space devoted to various cell phone accessories.

If any of them have ham radio manuals laying around, it is probably old stock they haven't sold.

I believe for most people, the only viable option for buying a study guide would be thru the ARRL or one of the other online sources, like W5YI.

The problem is the way you "discuss", Len.

Your discussion method here consists of:

- stating your opinions as if they are facts
- replying to differing opinions and corrections to your factual errors by insulting and attacking the other person
- refusing to correct or admit to factual errors you make
- going off into long off-topic lectures without making any clear connection to amateur radio.

Heck, Len, when someone disagrees with you here, or points out a factual error you have made, you cannot even refer to that person by their first name or callsign.

That pretty much describes your behavior here, Len.

You will soon be gone from rrap, Len. And not because of what others have done or will do.

http://www.netcabal.com/auk/faq.html

1. What is this newsgroup, alt.usenet.kooks (AUK)?

A mass of electrons spread out upon bandwidth scattered across the globe for the express purpose of separating the wheat from the chaff of the net.

2. This is a joke, right? RIGHT?!!

No more a joke than the fact that ISPs let people on every day who have nothing better to do than annoy their neighbors enough to win by popular vote silly little awards created for just such buffoons as them.

3. What's this newsgroup for?

The newsgroup alt.usenet.kooks is for the discovery and discussion of Kooks on Usenet and the Internet. These people are known technically as net.kooks.

4. What's this newsgroup NOT for?

This group exists for recreational Kookology, not for Very Personal Vendetta. It is not to be used for general harassment of someone, or for net abuse such as spamming and flooding and cancelbombing in an attempt to gain vengeance on someone or get the denizens of AUK to shut up.

Either way, it won't work, it's very messy, "Bob" will give you triple your money back, and you don't get a life.

Also, we [tinw] are not in the business of harassing the vulnerable or the insane. Occasionally an apparent net.kook proves to be genuinely ill. In such cases the person is disqualified from winning awards and other posters are asked to avoid exacerbating his or her problems. Similarly, trolling or kook-hunting in support groups is strongly discouraged.

5. Who let this newsgroup in here, and why wasn't I notified?

That's what you get for hogging the Beer Fund.

(Here you can view the control message that started it all, from our Mighty Founder MAC.)

http://www.netcabal.com/auk/cmsg.html

6. Who is a net.kook?

If you post uniquely strange, preferably incomprehensible articles, or you manifest a persistent, extreme, and somewhat bizarre obsession, you just might be a net.kook. And more.

It is important to note the subtle distinction between a net.kook, a net.cretin, a clueless newbie, troll, or garden-variety @$$hole. The newbie, one hopes, can acquire a clue on the installment plan even if he can't afford to buy one for cash; the cretin is merely stupid and/or irritating; the troll makes a fool out of himself by making a fool out of you, the @$$hole is, well, simply that. But a TRUE net.kook has a special fascination derived from his/her/its utter ineffability. Their behavior is irrational, if not downright weird, but they are seldom merely boring.

It is not considered appropriate to nominate clueless newbies, trolls, or longwinded spambrains as net.kooks. It is acceptable to nominate net.cretins, or simply to present them, without nomination, for whatever minor amusement value they may have; but the real focus here is on net.kooks in all their raging, indomitable glory.

Important Disclaimer: the fact that someone has been proclaimed a net.kook does not imply any psychological diagnosis in and of itself. A net.kook may or may not be clinically insane; that is not the concern of the AUK audience.

We hope.

7. Can you show me a few examples?

I'd rather not, but it may help to clarify things... The person who posted a handful of meaningless, ill-formed newgroup messages on May 21, 1994 was a Clueless Newbie. The person who hung around alt.religion.kibology during April and May 1994, constantly posting boilerplate "warning" messages telling people that ARK messages were intentionally meaningless, was a net.cretin. The people who post demented "scientific" theories, like Archimedes Plutonium's concept of the universe being one giant atom of plutonium, and seem incorrigible to criticism, are moderate net.kooks. The sort of being who constantly raves about the conspiracy against her/him/it is an extreme net.kook, especially if he/she/it automatically assumes that anyone who questions their world-view is an agent of the conspirators or is an ultra right-wing/left-wing extremist, and hides behind an anonymous remailer to avoid "persecution" even though they would get one hell of a lot less of it by not posting at all.

http://www.insurgent.org/~jhd/kookway.htm

8. How do I present a Kook on this group?

The preferred technique is to get the suspected Kook to start posting to AUK so that we can all see him/her/it in all their first-hand Glory. You can do this by posting followups to the suspect's weirder messages, with your followups nonchalantly crossposted to AUK. If the suspect responds to your messages without editing the Newsgroups line, you've achieved your goal.

Another acceptable method is to repost, complete and unedited, one or two of the suspected Kook's recent rants. If you do this, please provide a brief intro in the header describing what the hell you're doing, such as indicating who this person is, what group you found the message on, or why you think the rest of us should give a rat's @$$ about it.

You should be aware that if you try this with some perfectly reasonable posting, you may be flamed to net.hell and back and probably suspected of being a net.loon yourself. It is also considered extremely lame to nominate someone as a Kook simply because you have lost, or at least failed to win, a debate with them; persistently doing so is likely to get you nominated for Kook Awards. That someone fails to perceive the self-evident, unassailable wisdom of your viewpoint does not, in and of itself, constitute Kookery.

9. What are the Kook Awards?

The newsgroup alt.usenet.kooks offers a variety of widely-recognized and highly dubious honors for your service, applying to net.kooks everywhere. They recognize several kinds and many levels of net.kookery.

Here is a detailed list of AUK awards and descriptions.

http://www.netcabal.com/auk/awards.html

10. Who the FSCK appointed YOU net.kookologist/god/nazi etc.

Nobody. We have a Gift.

11. Are there any holidays in AUK?

Why yes, there sure are:

March 30th - CALL to ARMMs

Commemorating the earliest most virulent Kook post flood of Usenet, and the great flamewar that followed in its wake.

June 26th - KOOKS DAY

Named in commemoration of Earl Curley checking into the Motel Deep 6 to serve a major in the pine penalty box, the same date as Edmond Wollmann got arrested riding the San Clemente railway...on his motorcycle.

August 15th - DEAD DOC TAVISH DAY

Named in honor of the death of one of Usenet's most famed identities due to excessive Usenet exposure; his virtual corpse is buried in a rural cemetery near New Bremen, Texas

September 10th - KAZOO DAY

This holiday commemorates Raymond Ronald "Kazoo" Karczewski's conviction for seven felonies. May Raymold be a warning to all kooks who are tempted to think that a "Sovereign Christ" is above the law.

December 20th - AUK BIRTHDAY

The anniversary of the newgrouping of alt.usenet.kooks

12. What should I do if I'm paged on the Red Courtesy Telephone?

Give the caller Gandalf the Gray's speech to the demon. Verbatim.

13. Is alt.usenet.kooks archived anywhere?

Why would you even want to know? [But if you truly must know, GIYF. You masochist, you.]

14. What should we do about the book?

Burn it.

15. Where can I find out more about net.kooks?

Several mini-FAQs on classic kooks of the past and present (along with several non-kooky legendary netters) are available on the World Wide Web in various archives. Be sure to set aside coffee and cats before reading. [Try insurgent.org/kook-faq/]

16. What are the AUK Offices?

As well as the kook awards, kooks may compete to hold office for a month or longer. Nominations are made in exactly the same way as for awards; the difference is that the previous holder of the office always appears on the ballot paper when a new candidate emerges, and the winner remains in office until challenged again. At present, the offices are as follows.

Darth Bawl -

This office is held by Usenet's biggest crybaby.

Village Idiot -

The name says it all.

Kooki Information Minister -

Named in honour of Iraq's Mohammed Saeed al-Sahhaf, this office is held by the kook whose claims are most noticeably at variance with known facts.

Ministry of Circle Jerks -

Although many kooks are lone wolves, a few like to make friends with those who are as delusional as themselves. This office rewards the slurpfests that often ensue.

17. Are there any net.kook awards outside of AUK?

At various points of time there have been several, from the Christian groups' Steebie Award to alt.fan.art-bell's Angstrom Medal. At least two newsgroups, talk.politics.guns and comp.systems.mac.advocacy, have given out their own Kook of the Month awards. Check around from time to time to see what other net.kook awards might be around. [alt.atheism does them, too.]

18. What is the Cabal?

From the beginning of Usenet time, there has been but one force capable of holding it in check to remain in the realm of mortal existence. For today's Usenet world you need a Giant. A Behemoth. A Cabal of IMMENSE PROPORTIONS. A REALLY BIG CABAL to offer all news ORDER.

Within this force is the most ruthless and efficient organization on all Usenet, known as the Cabal Obsidian Order (COO). If YOU wish to know of this entity, read, learn, and do as you will.

SEE THE LIGHT OF COLLECTIVE WISDOM!!!

A. I SAID, what is the CABAL?

There Is No Cabal. Long Live The Cabal.

B. How does the Cabal function??

As well as any apocryphal organization can hope to function.

C. What are the weaknesses of the Cabal?

<chortle> What weaknesses?

D. What is the hierarchy and power structure of the Cabal?

Oh, you don't need to know that. Really. You can trust us, especially when it comes to information you haven't paid for.

E. What is the Cabal Obsidian Order?

The Cabal Obsidian Order (COO) is a profoundly secret collective of operatives designed to outrun, outgun and Eliminate the most vile scum and villainy the net has to offer.

F. How do I know if the COO is responsible for something?

If the COO's operatives are doing their job correctly, they'll be laughing at whoever is actually responsible.

G. Who are the leaders of the COO?

Leaders? Where we function we don't need Leaders.

H. What is the Beer Fund?

The more you contribute to it, the more we will tell you.

I. How may I apply to become an operative of the COO?

Pitiful begging at the Vote Wrangler's feet might help. Then again it might not.

19. Who is the FNVW?

Why, our highly esteemed Friendly Neighbourhood Vote Wrangler (FNVW), whose benevolent supreme dictatorship runs the electoral wheels of our great realm. Seven fearless folk have served, with distinction:

AUK VOTE WRANGLERS

Craig Dickson (1994-1995)
Matthew Legare (1995-1997)
Killfile Daemons (1997)
Robbie Honerkamp (1997-1998)
Phoenix (1997-2004)
Peter J Ross (2004-2006)
Sean Monaghan (2006-Present)

On retirement, Phoenix accepted the high office of Friendly Neighborhood "Bob"father.

20. Do I have what it takes to BE a Vote Wrangler?

<chortle> If you have to ask, you don't have what it takes.

21. Who do you %$#@!s think you are to oppose ME, Lord High Poster-Child of the Macrocosmic Universe?

We are the ones who can and will humiliate your @$$ if you use our group as your personal piss bowl. You are a freak of the universe. You do not give the orders here. And whether you like it or not, the universe is laughing behind your back.

22. That was MEAN, just plain MEAN!!!

Payback's a bitch, ain't it?

23. Should I expect ONE CONSISTENT response to my rude and obnoxious online behavior from the denizens of AUK?

Absolutely NOT.

24. To whom should I complain if I think I have been treated unfairly?

<Darth Vader>
You think you have been treated unfairly? </Darth Vader>

25. What kind of response can I expect as a result of my stupid online behavior at AUK?

Guilty party receives one or a combination thereof of the following assorted reactions (not at all limited to these, mind you):

1. Complete silence while we blow you off
2. Complete silence while we reload
3. Complete silence while we pull the plug on your account
4. Complete silence while we sleep at the switch
5. Complete silence while we sleep in our beds
6. Complete silence while we laugh behind your back
7. Complete silence while we wipe the splattered food and/or drinks off our screens
8. Complete silence while we contemplate the known macrocosmic universe
9. Complete silence while the Vote Wrangler pays good money to watch professional Denver teams find new ways to lose
10. Complete silence while we bask in the pure glow of our obnoxiously self-righteous selves
11. Complete silence while we play high-stakes poker with Snoopy, Spike, Andy, Olaf, Marbles and Woodstock
12. Complete silence while we never notice your NoCeM'd post
13. Complete silence while we never notice your spam-canceled post
14. Complete silence while we run your rude and obnoxious posts through goofyizers for reposting
15. Complete silence while the Trekkies among us watch the USS Defiant blast bad guys' ships into rubble and fly through the debris with that nice halo of sparks effect
16. Complete silence while we wait for our Gates-sponsored software systems to uncrash themselves
17. General laughter at your expense
18. General laughter and pointing at your expense
19. General laughter, pointing and personal insults at your expense
20. Someone exposes your true service provider to the Rabble
21. Someone does any of 1-20 and reports you to your state's Attorney General
22. Someone does any of 1-21 and reports you to the FBI National Computer Crime Squad (nccs@fbi.gov)
23. Someone does any of 1-22 and does highly amusing parodies of you during the entire process
24. Talk amongst ourselves about life, love and why they sell 8-hot-dog weenie sets with 10-bun packages

25. Sounds of awe as we wonder with dropped mouths how you were able to make a greater fool of yourself than you already had
26. Sounds of astonishment as we MARVEL at the FREAK
27. Flames in your generally specific direction
28. Flames of you in the third, fourth and fifth person
29. Flames from the Vote Wrangler from the other side of the Galactic Killfile just to annoy all hell out of you
30. Nominations for many noteworthy Kook awards

26. Can I really be kicked off my ISP for...

Being a total @$$hole?

If you try hard enough.

Top-posting like the pathetic imbecile that I am?

Usually not, but we can always try.

Forging someone else's valid e-mail address?

Absolutely.

Posting multiple copies of the same message to individual news groups (Excessive Multi Posting [EMP])?

Of course. It's the SPAMMING, stupid.

27. Can I really be thrown in jail for posting threatening messages?

Yes. People have been tried and convicted for sending threatening or harassing Email or Usenet posts. We do NOT support censorship of the Internet; however, posting a message stating you are going to cause virtual or unvirtual harm to someone will probably gain you a visit from your Friendly Neighborhood FBI Agent.

28. Fine. I'll just remain anonymous. That'll work, right?

BWWAAAAAAAAA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

Try it, pinkboy. An anon remailer service can be forced to turn you in for copyright violation, harassment, stalking; you name the crime - they've got the time. If you ran an anon remailer service what would be the point of protecting flagrant abusers of the net and the Law??

29. Okay, then I'll bust your #$%&$*!! @$$ off AUK instead!

Uh... yeah. Many denizens of AUK are abuse admins, know abuse admins, sleep with abuse admins, or otherwise have years of experience dealing with and educating others about precisely your kind of dubiosity. A good account is a terrible thing to waste, so don't sacrifice yours on our altar.

30. I just realized I am a Maroon. How can I improve my standing in the eyes of the Internet, my balloon doll, and, most importantly, "Bob"?

REPENT. The End is always near.

I asked a question in news.groups.proposals as to exactly what the correlation was between someone's ham radio license class and their ability to effectively moderate a USENET newsgroup.

Nobody came up with a suitable response, thus, I have to conclude there IS no relationship between the two.

I'll still wait for a suitable answer, logically presented, at which time I reserve the right to change my opinion.

From every posting I've seen, it appears to me that those who object the loudest to the proposed moderation team are those who seem to have a deep-seated bias/hatred of extra-class hams and the ARRL in general.

Right. Radio Shack pimps the hot products for the moment. The way I see it, them not even carrying license manuals speaks volumes about demand for them. Now, when you walk into a Radio Shack and see loads of HF antennas, HF rigs, and a shelf of study guides; then you can say that Ham radio is back in demand.

So, to bring this back on topic. I wonder if the intent of the average ham is to make ham radio grow or to maintain a stale status quo? The way I see it, a steady increase in qualified hams is a good thing. Ham radio needs a good infusion of new blood and the no-code tech license as a good start. However, it was only the beginning.

So, you are looking for information ...

Well, Paul W. Schleck is a politician, he can say one thing and do another, simple really, you see it all the time. The moderation groups intention is to stop all board discussion on amateur radio and only support the wishes and steerage of a relatively few hams--especially those of a certain group of extra class license holders. They mean to keep the old class system, established on morse, in effect.

You do not need to listen to the lies to know the truth I have stated above, you only need to watch their actions ...

one-hundred-and-seventy-four-postings? Geesh, I must be getting old, when I was younger I would have quadrupled that number by now--just demonstrates the necessity for recruiting new blood in here!

By "balance", I mean the group of moderators should represent the true "picture" of all amateurs. The moderators composed of all extras is a DEAD GIVEAWAY it does not--that seems a simple enough concept to grasp, to me.

Now on crude, vulgar, posts on sexual preference, and completely "off base" posts--we agree. At least that pleases me to no end. NEVER ALLOW THEM!

Seems we agree on "friendly" posts which might miss the topic by a point or two, pose no one an attack and simply do no harm. This pleases me, our agreement they SHOULD be tolerated.

However, you darn well know there are many extras who DO attempt to be "Lord" over the "peasant" tech-holding-no-coders. That is a damn lie. Posts which have gone here before more than support that. I am sure anyone reading this has memories of those posts.

Seems we can also agree, the public airwaves are just that, public. Methods and means need to found and implemented to place these back into the hands of Joe Blow Public--where they belong ...

Now, as to Paul, he has consistantly shown real "political talents", he simply promises all things to everyone. In the end you get a moderation group of Paul and his henchmen--that is SLICK!!! And, I am sure the techs are thrilled. I don't even think the generals appreciate that much ... You know as well as I, Paul imagines his little robo-guard on duty, armed with ip addys, newsserver ips and names, just ready to killfile posts from those NOT supporting their ideas. Close your eyes, you can see it to--called "human conspiracy." That bunch would allow Len in to point out their faulty thinking about as willingly as I would live with a rattlesnake! There is much truth in Lens' posting, sometimes they are just a bit cryptic and it has to be "dug" for. However, those he points 'em at are so blinded by their egos, they think it is all BS--it ain't ...

We will see about posting some of those old posts I referred to here, when I need them, you will see them ...

However, N2EY, you have at least "textually" made concessions I did not expect! At first I am tempted to think I "had you all wrong." Then I remember the "Standard Tactics of the Extras", which is "Say One Thing, Do Another."

However, I hold out hope ...

JS

Hmmm. That is weird, just had a vision of a group of people calling themselves the EXTRA-KKK. Dressed in white robes. Showing up in the middle of the night. Radio Shack cannot compete with big discount houses like HRO.

Several years ago Radio Shack used to sell computers as well as stereos and TVs. Now those product lines are all but missing from their stores. Why?
Lack of demand?

Not really. They simply cannot compete with Circuit City, Best Buy, etc. for those products. First they don't have the floor space necessary in the average Radio Shack to properly carry those goods, nor do they have the economies of scale that those other mega-retailers have.

Then, Addressed to KH6HZ:
> That says a lot about the growth of ham radio doesn't it?

This is the decades-old "quantity over quality" argument which has been the crux of ham radio's incentive licensing program for the past several decades.

Sustained growth in amateur radio is simply an unrealistic expectation.
Today, there are 650k licensed amateurs (and decreasing) with a rough population of 300 million people.

Amateur radio cannot maintain a sustained growth in terms of raw numbers of licensed amateurs. It simply will not happen. Even if you gave the licenses away with no test -- walk into Radio Shack and buy a radio and start transmitting right away -- it wouldn't happen. How many people use CB radios today compared to, say, 20 years ago? How is the FRS doing these days in terms of raw numbers?

Some people, I believe miguidedly so, keep focusing on the number of licensed hams as an indicator of ham radio's health.

I believe this is an incorrect focus to take. Instead, I think people should focus on quality over quantity. I ask myself this question:

Which would I rather have:

a) 10 guys and their wives who passed their license exams, never learned anything else, bought some gear at HRO, and now park on a 2 meter repeater and ragchew and make 'honey do' calls, or
b) 3 hams who took their license exams, continue to experiment with new antennas, participate in MARS or ARES, and during emergencies help erect antennas and provide emergency communications.

Personally, I'd rather have the 3 hams. The 10 guys and their wives are certainly welcome, but if I had a choice, I'd take the 3 over the 10 any day. The 3, in my opinion, help further the goals of Part 97.1 moreso than the other 10.

Frankly, people need to stop focusing on raw numbers. 1 million licensed hams is meaningless if they never turn on their radios and actually use the frequencies they are allocated.

Anyway, like I said, raw numbers are impossible to sustain anyway. Ham radio has a significant barriers to entry. It simply isn't going to have the "mass appeal" to the population as a whole. It is a technical hobby. Life's demands these days make it such that not many people are going to take up ham radio.

Focusing on raw numbers is a losing proposition. Sure, you can continue to fiddle with the licensing system, removing more and more "barriers to entry" (aka: licensing requirements), but what is the end result? What do you do when there ARE no more "barriers to entry" (aka: licensing requirements) and 'growth' is still negative?

The value of the ARS to the US isn't raw numbers -- it is having a trained pool of radio operators. IMO, a trained pool of radio operators doesn't mean you simply study, pass a test, and then you've gotten your "graduation certificate". "Ok, I passed, don't have to study any longer". What is the long-term value of that person, other than upping the body count, to the ARS?

I believe (and I've stated this years ago) the focus needs to be redirected... The ARS should strive for Quality over Quantity.

The doesn't mean make the tests "harder". No, they shouldn't require an BSEE to pass.

Many moons ago, a few people in this forum equated morse code with a buggy whip. Unfortunately, in today's world, it isn't morse code that is the equivalent of a buggy whip, it is amateur radio as a whole.

You must be going to the wrong Radio Shacks. I saw stereos and TV's all over the place when I went in. In theory, Radio Shack should be in a much better position to sell ham equipment than HRO provided they could sell it. If you don't believe in economy of scale, look at Wal-Mart and get back with me.

The last 4 Radio Shacks I've frequented had, perhaps 2-3k of floor space. The last one I was in was appx. 20' wide and 150' in length. There's no way such a store could carry a wide selection of TVs, stereos, computers, ham gear, etc.

Radio Shack isn't Walmart.

Maybe if the typical Radio Shack had the floor space of a Walmart, you might have a point.

They do not, nor will they ever.

Well, you could. You'd have to pick the correct answer from those offered in the multiple choice. But you could work "backwards" with each choice to find the one that fits right.

The FCC probably weighed the downsides of a cheater escaping undetected and decided that such a cheater would not degrade the quality or safety of the amateur service that much. Unlike say a cheater "passing" state medical board exams to become a licensed medical doctor. You just have to do enough to limit it to a level that doesn't make testing look like a joke.

Yea, I would agree.. We are not above average as a group....

Personally, I took the test expecting to fail, having just taken the General to upgrade my Tech Plus. I figured, what the heck? It didn't cost anymore to try and I had studied some. I didn't think I was ready, but I passed so here I am, lucky to be an Extra in my estimation.

So, do I consider myself an expert in all things Ham Radio by virtue of my license class? Nope, I got a lot to learn and I'm sure there are some folks out there who have a boat load more practical experience than I, but have less privileges. The two Elmers who are largely responsible for me getting my original license among them. Thanks guys! (WB0WMP, K4GRW)

Oddly enough, virtually all the "extras" I met during my tenure as a "non-extra" didn't consider themselves Einsteins either. Now that I'm an Extra, I do not consider myself an Einstein either.

It seems that only a small subset of hams (and non-hams) who post to this forum seem to run into these self-proclaimed Einstein Extras.

But then, if you read their postings long enough, you'll begin to understand that this bias towards Extras really isn't due to the fact these extras are self-proclaimed Einsteins, but rather the fact that these Extras passed a 20wpm code test at one point or another.

No, John, I'm afraid you have it wrong. That is not the intent at all. I'd really appreciate it if you'd have something factual with which to back up your conspiracy theories instead of just presenting wild accusations.

You haven't stated any truths, John. You've only presented some crackpot view.

Who says that should be the case? The posters will present a view of amateur radio. Do you think the newsgroup to which you are posting does that?

For an anonymous fellow who likes to condescend, I don't see your statement as logically sound. Your concept is simple to grasp if you throw common sense and logic out the window.

They could be tolerated with a note to the poster that his post is really off-topic.

Your statement? I think we've seen a similar number of lower class ticket holders who feel that they know all there is to know. We even have a one fellow with no license who tries to lord it over all radio amateurs.

Usenet isn't the public airwaves, "John".

That isn't the way it works, "John". We have the FCC to regulate access to the airwaves. You can't set up and operate an FM broadcast station just because you want to. You can't get on the amateur bands just because you want to.

He's never promised me a thing.

Your use of the word "henchmen" is slick. Your unsubstantiated accusations are slick.

That has to be the wildest conspiratorial nonsense I've seen in this group for quite some time.

You don't know any of us, "John". Len is a sidewalk superintendent to amateur radio. He sits on the sidelines and shouts, "that's no way to do that!"

Since you're replying to my post, let me make it emphatically clear that I advocate publishing the questions and the answers as long as the questions are all encompassing of what a ham needs to know.

I disagree, Mike. Radio Shack had its roots in selling amateur equipment when it was a Boston firm decades back. When Tandy bought it, it in good shape. It swallowed Allied Electronics back around 1970 and either closed or turned into Radio Shack stores, all of the Allied retail outlets. It owns and operates Allied Electronics as an industrial distributor. Right now the company is in search of itself. Why would people go to Radio Shack to buy bad stereo equipment or overpriced computers when the big box stores are selling better and cheaper stereo equipment and computers. Radio Shack is getting out of the parts business. If you've been into one of the outlets recently, you'll find the sales people woefully short on product knowledge. At the moment, RadShack is like a cellular phone store which pushes batteries.

When Radio Shack made a decision to push amateur radio gear ten or fifteen years back, it did so mostly with Radio Shack branded equipment which was short on features and rather shoddily made. It pushed a few 2m and 70cm FM HT's and mobile transceivers and a few niche market rigs like the low power 10m transceivers. The sales people were, again, woefully short on product knowledge.

If Radio decided to sell a wide variety of amateur radio equipment of assorted brands and it gave adequate sales training to its staff, it'd be a big player. It has a great distribution network and outlets all over the country. It could even dedicate a store in each major market to amateur radio sales. It could offer discount pricing and service. Unfortunately, it has never had management who "got it". I predict the company may end up disappearing in a few years if things stay the way there are.

Competition from Circuit City, Staples, Office Depot, Office Max, Walmart, K-Mart and the like. These stores offer cheap prices compared to anything offered by RadShack. Radio Shack could easily compete with these stores. Only Circuit City has a large store dedicated to electronics. The others have departments which are no larger than the average Radio Shack store. The big box stores aren't offering ham gear and I don't think Radio Shack could be successful in selling amateur radio gear in all of its stores. We're still a very small consumer electronic market.

Bad ideas are bad ideas. Good ideas have some basis in fact. You've

Okay on those points, Bob, I agree with you. It's good that you reminded me of the differences in location and, perhaps, my "urban thinking." Just to get organized, I started thinking about "radio parts" from my perspective:

I've lived in a large urban location for 50 years, one that was once a center of aerospace technology, now slowly lessening as more corporations opt out for lower-taxation states. Lockheed Aircraft was one of the first biggies to go, leaving behind a HUGE production area that was razed and rebuilt as an enormous shopping center (I never worked for Lockheed).
Hughes Aircraft (electronics, Hughes Tool Co. built aircraft...) got gobbled up by larger corporations and morphed, retaining only the logo. As a result of all that growth and change in aerospace and electronics there is a huge electronic-hobbyist interest around my neck of the woods. Some of that is in amateur radio and "six-land" has a very large population of licensed amateurs. With all that hobby activity going on there are a large number of retail outlets, chains and independents alike, within relatively easy driving distance. This area is one large incorporated city with several smaller incorporated cities and 80+ suburbs all interconnected with streets, not roads. Area population is somewhere in the neighborhood of 8 million (give or take).

I don't go out to "radio stores" often. There was an HRO outlet in a mini-mall across the major intersection where my wife and I shop for food regularly. That HRO moved to another part of Burbank late last year. I haven't been in the new location but would expect it to be the same as in the previous site and in the Van Nuys location it had been before that. Right next to it (in the mini-mall) is a small Radio Shack that I would go to only for replacement watch batteries or buy some inexpensive gifts for non-radio friends. There are two other Radio Shack outlets in Burbank that I know of, one long-situated corner store in its "downtown" and another in the three-story indoor Mall less than a mile from it. Within 5 miles driving are at least a half dozen Radio Shack stores...and about four other electronics component stores that aren't chained nationally...plus a couple of 'surplus' (civil, not military) electronic outlests slightly farther away and several telephone book pages of listings for outlets within about 15 miles driving. For personal computers I've got a choice of the totally awesome Fry's Electronics consumer electronics supermarket in what was an old Lockheed Aircraft building (they have at least 3 dozen "checkout stands") 2 miles away and a PC Club store 3 miles away. Frys has an aisle of just components, maybe heavy on computer-related parts but applicable to "radio" as well. I mention that not to brag but just to describe the local urban area where I live and have lived for 50 years.

Now, I CAN be accused of "not paying attention" to smaller geographic locations in the USA and am "guilty" of not "keeping up a running inventory" at each store. :-) Mea culpa, mea culpa. But, I don't think that is a terrible felony crime...certain others in here WILL! :-)

In rummaging through my memory, I recall that Radio Shack had, in the past, carried ARRL publications. So did the Electronic City store in Burbank, a store that was there longer than I've lived in the neighboring L.A. suburb of Sun Valley. Electronic City went to sound and video equipment to suit the growing local business of film and TV production, phasing out its amateur radio equipment sales, emphasizing off-shore components suitable for all kinds of non-radio hobby activities (those can be used in ham radios since there isn't any difference in physics despite the protestations of some amateur barracks lawyers).

Yeah, I've confused the HRO contents of the old mini-mall location with its former next-door neighbor, the little Radio Shack store, I suppose. :-(Haven't taken inventory in the other two RS outlets but have gotten some catalogs at those; can't remember which one gave out the catalogs. At that former HRO location I did buy an ARRL Handbook on CD as a gift for a friend about four years ago (?). I can't remember if Electronic City in Burbank still has a floor rack of Amidon toroids since I wasn't looking for those a year ago; Bill Amidon started that in Burbank, CA, years ago. If I want toroid cores, powdered-iron or ferrite, I either go to Dieter's "Kits and Parts" website, ordering by e-mail, or (if a large quantity) directly to Micrometals or Ferroxcube or one of their distributors.

I'm not a "casual week-end hobbyist" person but do a mixture of actual paid-for-services work (professional by definition) or very unpaid-for-except-by-me (amateur by definition of monetary compensation). Just to keep from running out to "radio stores" constantly, I keep a stock of 10% tolerance-vales but 5% real quarter-Watt resistors, 50 to 100 each, from 10 Ohms to 10 MegOhms. Those cost me all of a couple pennies each from Allied, ordered on-line when they had a special. I've ordered a 60 MHz 'scope and triple-outlet, metered power supply from Circuit Specialists by e-mail when they had a special sale on those. I can and have ordered other electronic parts from Digi-Key, Newark, Mouser, Ocean State (in Rhode Island) and Jameco (in CA bay area), all by e-mail...other than Avnet (for the 'business side' of this shop). As "John Smith I" said in another thread, the Internet has become a part of social fabric and I will vouch for it to be a part of consumer commerce. My wife and I sort of tested that in 1999 by ordering an eastern king dual adjustable air-mattress bed by e-mail. It was shipped from two locations (Florida and California), assembled by us, and still works just fine today. At half the price of retail store cost...from stores we couldn't reach by car. No problems in billing, purchase, or even traceable e-spam as a result of that order. The amount of shopping one can do on-line is enormous and, usually, worthwhile. Amazon, as an example, sells much more than books...but some ARRL publications can be ordered through them...at the same prices as what ARRL charges on-line but, no shipping charges on large purchases. :-)

I was born and raised in an Illinois city of about 50K, now grown to about 180K in population. In 1948 it boasted (yes, boasted then) of having TWO "radio parts stores," only one of which concerned amateur radio things. We've been back there several times since but I've not gone shopping for electronics any one of those times. I HAVE noticed what Hans Brakob mentioned here several years ago about the decrease of "ham radio outlets." I agree to that, having seen the same thing. But, I'm not focussed on just ham radio. I exist in more of the larger "radio" world (actually electronics world, radio is a subset of that). Yes, I'm guilty of not keeping EXACT track of ARRL products. I've only heard about those for over a half century...and keep hearing about them (described in glowing terms) just about every day in here. :-)

I realize that small (relative) geographical locations don't have as much of most anything as "big cities." I really can't help that, but the PEOPLE in all areas seem to have common personal desires and needs and the marketplace actually RULES what is available where and for how much. Sometimes we have to go "scrounging" outside our local area to get what we want. The way I see it the Internet has been a fantastic LEVELER for all in that "scrounging." The local delivery shipping companies help that along everywhere in the USA. Shopping can start in one's computer and wind up with the product right to one's front door.

Cheers,
LenAnderson@ieee.org

Yes, I can understand that "the sticks" (as you say) don't have all the communications facilities. However, we can't neglect the fact that so much of the USA population lives in urban areas.

In my life experience, as I wrote, I've also been in emergencies. Further, since I live in a "sunbelt" area, we don't have ice storms and, usually, electric power here is a reliable thing. But, I spent the first 19 years of my life IN a northern Illinois city that DID experience ice storms, regular winter snowfall, etc., and the electric power was not always reliable. No, I wasn't involved in radio comms then.

My urban area has a LARGE population. On January 17, 1994, we all experienced a sizeable earthquake here. It killed 58 people. It left thousands temporarily homeless, hundreds requiring medical aid for injuries. The ENTIRE population (roughly 8 million) was without ANY electric power for half a day, a few areas (physically damaged) without for 3 days. My point was not a "can you top this" thing but to point out that the public safety and utility infrastructure had ALREADY prepared for this sort of thing and acted as they had planned and trained for when disaster struck. At that time the centralized emergency communications network was new, involving dozens of neighboring government public safety organizations. It received a "trial by fire" test and passed it. Now I don't claim (or "boast") that it is best, only that it WORKS. Intelligent advanced planning and continuing training WORKS.

Let's see. Others have complained that "the sticks" don't have lots of money to do such things. No doubt true. But the Greater Los Angeles area doesn't have "lots of money" either. TAXES pay for nearly all. If there are 8 million taxpayers, then the amount becomes large. In the case of the LA emergency communications network, the local public safety organizations ALREADY HAD the major part of the communications equipment. So did the utility companies. The thing needed was some way to tie them all together, ORGANIZE, PLAN AHEAD, and KEEP TRAINING in the different possible scenarios.

Out here there's lots of nature lovers who grouse and grumble about our "concrete rivers." Flood control channels, numerous in the 1.5 million population San Fernando Valley. What most of them don't realize is that the normally quiet, peaceful rivers and streams have become raging torrents during heavy rainfall and flash flooding. There's a few old, old motion pictures still around that recorded one of the old floods. It used to KILL people and render a lot of "the Valley" impossible to settle for cities. Some good thinking, PLANNING AHEAD, help from the WPA following the Great Depression enabled the flood control channels to be built and make the place safe from flood destruction. Yeah, "the sticks" couldn't afford that, either...the federal government had to help out. [need I mention the TVA?] But, we wound up with no terrible destructive flash flooding as had been nature's norm in past centuries. Mama Nature goes on a big bender every once in a while, everywhere. We can't stop that, only divert some of it.

The key is not necessarily money, just to ORGANIZE, PLAN AHEAD, and KEEP TRAINING for any area, large, small, or in-between, using resources at hand. More resources is a different problem...politics of money disbursement is something to handle at the local level.

ORGANIZE, PLAN AHEAD, TRAIN and keep on TRAINING.
It works. For professionals and amateurs alike. Press releases won't do it.

After at least three years of some of the total crap in here had been going on. WHERE were the "powers-that-be"? Sleeping? The Google folks were unresponsive to "objectionable posting." They just let it accumulate.

Since every newsgroup was created by humankind, it can ALSO be "un-created" by humankind. Nobody in power apparently wanted to delete any group...so very un-liberal and "anti-democratic" or something.

"Oh, we can't impinge on the freedom of speech!" seemed to be the "Powers" shine-off. No, no, no, NO we can't remove, halt, or put ANY stoppage on freedom of speech!

What of the massive cross-posting? Vince Fiscus under his nom-deguerre of "Slow Code" deliberately (and with malice aforethought) mass-posted to many amateur newsgroups knowing full well that most browsers would automatically mass-post replies. Filled up all kinds of computer mass storage at many ISPs, all with dupes.

Had this been a BBS or BBS network, the offenders would have been summarily yanked, terminated without prejudice, and the blessed freedom-of-speech WOULD HAVE CONTINUED, but without troublemakers. I've seen that done, been a party to it in a few cases. Free speech went on.
Ordinary folk could tell the difference between real freedom and deliberate one-sidedness overlaid by arrogant self-defined "superiority."

No collitsch degrease needed to tell the difference.
But, here we have the academia nuts telling us they all but invented "moderating." :-(Then we've got a bunch of "movers and shakers" recently listed which all but says out loud they "made it all possible."

Pfooey, a decade before the Internet went public there were BBSs and BBS nets with amateur radio "pubs" (public boards, common name of what are called "newsgroups" now) in the USA, a few interconnecting with other continents. Wasn't my cuppa but I knew of them, looked in a few. Some of those conversations got wild and wooly but outright miscreants, filth-spouters, and attempted take-over artists were summarily deleted. Gone. Fini. Full thirty.

Not to worry now. We have the "third RFD" in progress. By the time of the eleventh (when, in 2011?) there might - finally - be a decision. The "moderated group" may then become a reality. This is JUST LIKE some of those "study groups" on local government projects where a "study" might as for an "action committee" to be formed, which then leads to another "study group" be formed to "study" the problem. :-(

Idiocy in action...with "credentials."

Really? Wow, Allied is LYING to us!

I just pulled down the 2007 Allied catalog from the shelf, the one that arrived at the end of last year. 2,192 pages, 8 1/2 x 11 format. It's about 2 13/16 inch thick. I looked at the corporate address on the back page:

Allied
An Electrocomponents Company
7410 Pebble Drive
Fort Worth TX 76116

I've ordered from them via Internet. As a result I'm on their "announcements" e-mail list. I remember Allied from its beginning days in Chicago, IL. Back in 1956 they had a large store there selling 1956-era electronic parts. Can't see a thing about "Tandy" in that catalog.

I was unaware that they were once a "ham radio supplier."
All the time I thought they supplied parts to the electronics industry. Thanks for clearing that up.

It's always a treat to hop in here and get the "real low-down" from the ...

Oh, and that 2007 Allied catalog sits next to the Mouser 2006 catalog #628...almost as big in size and pages. Those two sit next to the Jameco February 2007 catalog, not as big but sure looks like it is going to be a very big distributor some day.

It's nice to see all those distributors have "found themselves."

Unfortunately, I had much the same experience. There is a good bit of "anti-Elmering that has gone on the last few years. I will note at the same time I did get some excellent help from a few old timers. They are the ones who should be emulated.

The group I am in is doing what we can to change the Anti-Elmering situation. We're starting Classes, projects even at beginners level, and above all grumpy superior Hams who believe that the new guys are just glorified CB'ers are welcome - but they have to check their attitude at the door.

Agreed. If a cheater were to keep their nose clean and operate properly, they would appear to everyone as just another good ham.

Of course, those with a tendency to cheat tend to expose themselves in the end.Probably part of the personality, and general stupidity that cheaters have in common.

Mike:

In college, in the very early '70s, I had an electronics instructor, came to teach through the military. I was confused and seen academia as a series of VERY rigid hoops you had to jump through.

On day, Mr. Willet(sp) said to me, during a discussion, "It doesn't matter how you learn a thing, it only matters you learn it."

At the time I did not realize the importance of his words, but not too much after, I adopted them and have shared them with others, along the way ... and, more importantly, I have adopted them as a rule to live by.

Those words have served me well ...

Warmest regards,
JS

Not at all. Your 20WPM code tape Extra License is irrelevant.

When certain Extras tell >me< how to conduct my amateur life all the while scarfing up a bunch of "club" calls, DX calls, and vanity calls, then I see them as thinking they are somehow much more priveleged than the next guy, AKA they're smarter than everyone else because they "Got Over on The Man!"

When a Coast Guard Extra Lecturer aids and abets the scarfing up and grabs one for himself, I have a problem with that, too.

It's just a case of people telling others what to do while being inconsistent in their own lives... So get over yourselves.

It's a shame that words are being distorted to mean something that they were not to mean. If inaccurate is a euphemism for lying, what are we now going to use to take the place the original meaning of inaccurate?

It will be very tough to grow ham radio. We've "saturated the market" so to speak. If you check around the internet (for example, Speroni's site is one), you can find the statistics on a few of the other countries. We have 2 hams per thousand people while Europe is running more like 1 ham per thousand people. While we need to actively recruit, there just aren't a lot of people out there that are inclined to amateur radio as a part of their leisure pursuits. We will have to recruit hard just to stay at the current level. It would not surprise me if our numbers dropped in half over the next decade or so before leveling out.

Dee:

The following are definitions of "lie":
be located or situated somewhere; occupy a certain position be lying, be prostrate; be in a horizontal position; "The sick man lay in bed all day"; "the books are lying on the shelf" dwell: originate (in); "The problems dwell in the social injustices in this country"
be and remain in a particular state or condition; "lie dormant" tell an untruth; pretend with intent to deceive; "Don't lie to your parents"; "She lied when she told me she was only 29"
a statement that deviates from or perverts the truth have a place in relation to something else; "The fate of Bosnia lies in the hands of the West"; "The responsibility rests with the Allies" Norwegian diplomat who was the first Secretary General of the United Nations (1896-1968)
lie down: assume a reclining position; "lie down on the bed until you feel better" position or manner in which something is situated

Technically, anything "deviating" from the truth is a lie. This is not how we commonly use the word "lie" however, as we "add" that the intended goal of the person stating the "lie" is deception.

Or: You can lie without making a conscious effort to do so.

I just point out the above for intellectual diversion. And, when I accuse someone of lying, I am assuming and inferring he/she consciously wishes to be deceptive and/or misleading.

If you want to see the page I got this from, enter this into a search engine (google?) define:lie

Note the colon and NO spaces. This "dictionary" works well for any other words also ... example: define:politician

Warmest regards,
JS

Not really. It says more about the fact that stores across the board have little interest in serving the niche markets. Once upon a time, Radio Shack did cater to hams. At that time not only were the hams fewer in number than today but they were also a smaller percentage of the population than now. At the time, Radio Shack did serve the niche market of hams (among others). But time has marched on and most businesses can't serve the niche markets cost effectively.

Ham radio isn't the only area where one must resort to the Internet to find the products they want.

HRO doesn't compete against Radio Shack in the same market. Radio Shack is consumer goods, HRO sells in a niche market. Radio Shack is retail, HRO is mainly mail order.

Nothing wrong with that. For many years, our club satellite "guru" and our club VHF/UHF "guru" were Technician's or Tech Pluses. The VHF/UHF guy had been a Tech Plus for over 10 years. Everyone in the club (as far as I know) respected their expertise in these areas. In the last couple of years they've both upgraded to General and then Extra.

I believe the bias goes even deeper. Even if code were not an issue, that bias would still exist simply because the Extra has met a higher written requirement too. In today's society, it seems to be politically incorrect to have acquired more knowledge than someone else.

And that was my point. If it reaches the stage where radio shack (or Wal-Mart) has jumped on the band wagon, we may need to worry about overpopulating the bands. As long as the only place to find equipment is pretty much mail order to a "niche market," growth is good. BTW, there was a time that Radio Shack targeted a "niche market." However, those times are long past. IMO, their products were poorly made knock offs of good equipment.

The other option is for the last ham to turn off the lights before he dies out and the bands are sold to commercial interests.

Sometimes it's easier to just do a quick Google search and you find things like this...

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Allied_Radio

Allied Radio would change ownership in 1970 when Radio Shack's parent company (Tandy Corporation) bought both Allied Radio & Allied Electronics. The retail division was merged with Tandy's retail unit to become Allied Radio Shack, with the main office of both divisions moving to Fort Worth, Texas. But as a result of the merger, many major shopping centers would have two Allied Radio Shack stores competing for the same dollars. As a result, the former Allied Radio storefronts would fade away, with the former Radio Shack stores taking on both product lines (and the expense of the extra inventory.) This was in some ways a more difficult task as the original Radio Shack storefronts were typically smaller than the Allied Radio stores.

By 1973 due directly to federal court action, Tandy was ordered to divest itself of Allied Radio, but by that time with the purging of duplicate stock and closing of low volume stores, there was very little left to sell off, and the Tandy stores would once again bear the Radio Shack name.

Since Tandy did not have a commercial-industrial supply division, Allied Electronics would continue as a "Division of Tandy Corporation" that served the manufacturing sector until the mid-1980s when it began to change owners.

Give it up.

There will be no facts forthcoming, only arm waving babble and attempts

Here you go from the company's web site, Leonard.

quote
Allied History
Over the years, Allied Electronics has built an enviable reputation as a distributor of electronic components.

Since our conception in 1928, Allied’s main pursuit, and now our legacy, has been providing excellence through customer service. Now, as part of the Electrocomponents Group, Allied has added a global presence to our customer orientation – the latest chapter in our fascinating, eight decade history.

1928: Allied Radio was established as the radio parts distribution arm of Columbia Radio Corporation. The company was soon to become one of the most recognizable names in the electronics industry.

1932: The company built a growing business in marketing radio parts and kits to home hobbyists, and was one of the first to sell electronics through a catalog. In addition, Allied opened storefront distribution outlets to reach more amateur ham radio operators and experimenters.

1941-45: Having survived the depression, Allied focused on the war effort, primarily servicing government contracts and high-priority industrial orders. Allied gained experience in the industrial arena for the first time through government and military contracts, which laid the groundwork for the distribution niche we occupy today.

1946-60: The electronics industry exploded as new developments in electronics were adopted on a widespread basis in commerce and industry. Innovations such as television, industrial automation, space technology and defense accelerated the need for electronics. Consumer demand also grew as radio sets and components not available during the war proliferated. During this exciting era, Allied gained both the experience and specialized staff necessary to handle both consumer and industrial sales.

1962: The first industrial catalog for Allied Electronics, a subsidiary of Allied Radio, was released. The company continued to serve both amateur and professional ham radio operators as one of the few places to locate that “hard to get” piece of radio equipment.

1970: Allied moved its headquarters from Chicago, Illinois to Fort Worth, Texas.

1981: Allied began the process of moving from an all manual system to a fully computerized company. The process was completed in 1985.

1995: Allied is the first electronics distribution company to come out with a CD-ROM catalog and quickly followed-up by entering the e-commerce arena with the launch of a web site.

1999: Allied Electronics acquired by Electrocomponents of the United Kingdom.

2000 & Beyond: The combination of Allied's commitment to a high level of customer service and Electrocomponents’ global reach delivers a very powerful supply chain solution to meet future customer demands.
unquote

So, as you can see, Leonard, the company was sold by Tandy to an outfit in the UK. There is still some tie to Radio Shack as there a link on the site featuring the Radio Shack "RS" logo.

> I've ordered from them via Internet. As a result I'm on their

You can't imagine how happy this news of yours makes me, Len. When I was an outside salesman for the firm, it was owned by Tandy.

You couldn't possibly remember as you can see from the company history.

> Back in 1956 they had a

Allied wasn't owned by Tandy in 1956. If you've been reading along, Allied was acquired by Tandy in 1970.

> I was unaware that they were once a "ham radio supplier."

They sold all of it: Collins, Hallicrafters, Drake, Central Electronics, Johnson, Ameco, Hammarlund, etc. My first amateur radio equipment was bought from their used equipment list. Of course Allied pushed their own "Knight" brand as well.

> All the time I thought they supplied parts to the electronics > industry. Thanks for clearing that up.

They did that very well until Tandy took over. That began the downhill slide for Allied.

It is evident that I knew more about the company than you. Always glad to help fill in the gaps in your knowledge.

I'm pleased to hear of the very good organization of your catalog shelf.
My congratulations on your hard work.

> It's nice to see all those distributors have "found themselves."

Are you going to attempt lecturing me about the electronics distribution business too, Len? It'll be just one more thing in which I've been a participant and you have not.

That doesn't make any sense, Mr. Cheese. I've never had a French radio amateur tell me that he is operating outside his authorized frequency allocation. In fact, I've never had a French (or any other nationality) radio amateur make a point of telling me that he is operating inside his authorized allocation.

You've nailed it, Dee. There can be all sorts of reasons for an inaccuracy.

If I cut a board to 9 7/16 when it should have been 9 9/16, it doesn't mean that I've lied about the measurement.

funny you have stated that the prevledges of the Extras were only 3 percent more than the the tech and BB is a general

thus surely something like perhaps 1.5 percent can hardly be "much more prevlegdges"

The broad powers given to Bush by this legislation allow him to capture, indefinitely detain, and refuse a hearing to any American citizen who speaks out against Iraq or any other part of the so-called 'War on Terror.'

"If you write a letter to the editor attacking Bush, you could be deemed as purposefully and materially supporting hostilities against the United States. If you organize or join a public demonstration against Iraq, or against the administration, the same designation could befall you. One dark-comedy aspect of the legislation is that senators or House members who publicly disagree with Bush, criticize him, or organize investigations into his dealings could be placed under the same designation. I'm glad you've admitted to being owned/co-owned since 1994 in another thread. Man, you are a slow learner. I would have guessed that you'd learn a decent flame or two if you've been around since 1994 but alas, you're yingtarded

Bob, thanks for the "Wiki-up" on Allied, including Allied Radio.

If you haven't been here for years, you might not understand how Heil's "game" is played. :-) Let me explain:

A long time ago, in a State department far away, Heil got totally pissed with me in here for not going overboard with gratuitous praise and congratulations on his mighty efforts at hamming embassies in the middle of Africa.
Especially Guinea-Bisseau. Since then he's seen fit to "correct" me as much as possible. Gotta love it when he tries SO hard! :-) [he IS a code-tested extra and thus very "superior"]

I am not interested in ALLIED (Radio or by the single name) corporate history. I'm only interested in the parts they sell, the price for those parts, and whether or not they have them in stock. So much the better if the signs point to them staying in business over a year from now. If not,
I look for another distributor that sells in small to large quantities (there are many of them in the USA and Canada).
No sweat there.

I am well acquainted with "Allied Radio" and actually was in there store in the second week of February, 1956, my Dad with me (I had gone along with his meeting of some model industry supers, then to Fort Sheridan to see if my footlocker had arrived yet...it hadn't). Large store interior but almost entirely displays of parts and some instruments, which made me a bit disappointed in a way.
Expected more. I had ordered "radio parts" from them in 1948 and then in 1954 while in the Army in Japan, had always seen their ads in publications of that time. [I built a thermin for a buddy in '54, he being a music instructor in civilian life] Allied Radio catalogs were very thin in those days, perhaps the thickest I remember is around 3/8 inch. Yes, they has "radio parts" but their market was mainly industry and the electronic hobbies went beyond radio then. Chicago was "far away" at 90 miles before I entered the Army. :-)

ALLIED's 2007 catalog is BIG at over 2000 pages. I'm not going to look at "all" of them to see if "Tandy" is mentioned despite Heil's insistence that 20-year-old corporate history is SOOOOO important! :-) ALLIED is very much IN BUSINESS and looks to stay that way for a long time. By e-mail or by voice telephone the staff is nice and obliging, on-the-job...no detectable Indian accents. :-) I've gotten a few samples from Chicago electronic companies shipped from ALLIED stock, believe it or not. Good service.

A great problem with some olde-tyme hammes is that NONE of the biggie electronics parts distributors stock much HF "radio" parts that they expect. The parts market just isn't there any more. Real radio parts are involved at frequencies higher than HF. Those are in abundance. Anyone who wants old-style HF "radio" parts has to go to smaller mail outlets such as Ocean State Electronics. But, they will be shocked by the high prices charged, not at all as low as when they were adolescents.

The same with "plate and filament" transformers. About the only outlet in North America for stock parts is a Hammond division up in Canada (distributed by Mouser down here). Fine products I hear, but the cost is high. Electronics parts are, and have been for decades, oriented to lower-voltage semiconductor technology. What was once a provence of ham radio builders is now much much larger in favor of computer-digital components. Vacuum tubes (from new, old stock), if you can get them, now cost five times what they did in 1960 and go up from there. The old days are GONE. They won't come back as they once were.

Now, as to Heil, he doesn't know his chain gets yanked and his buttons pushed by me. :-) That's part of my game whenever he puts on the Waffen SS persona and tells me "you never did such a thing!" or puts on the little red hat while dancing to organ-grinder Miccolis' tune on "corrections." It is both funny and tragic that they carry on like they do, but that's their way in here. Shrug...I've seen worse on BBSs after first doing computer-modem comms 22 years ago. Usually I just shine them off but the chain-yanking and button-pushing urge gets irresistable and off we go. Poor Heil doesn't realize he's been controlled every time he tries to control others! :-) Gotta love it...! :-)

Regards,
LenAnderson@ieee.org

"Consider that language a moment. 'Purposefully and materially supported hostilities against the United States' is in the eye of the beholder, and this administration has proven itself to be astonishingly impatient with criticism of any kind. The broad powers given to Bush by this legislation allow him to capture, indefinitely detain, and refuse a hearing to any American citizen who speaks out against Iraq or any other part of the so-called 'War on Terror.'

"If you write a letter to the editor attacking Bush, you could be deemed as purposefully and materially supporting hostilities against the United States. If you organize or join a public demonstration against Iraq, or against the administration, the same designation could befall you. One dark-comedy aspect of the legislation is that senators or House members who publicly disagree with Bush, criticize him, or organize investigations into his dealings could be placed under the same designation. In effect, Congress just gave Bush the power to lock them up." -- William Rivers Pitt

"It has become clear in recent months that a critical mass of the American people have seen through the lies of the Bush administration; with the president's polls at an historic low, growing resistance to the war Iraq, and the Democrats likely to take back the Congress in mid-term elections, the Bush administration is on the ropes. This from a 90 nym using fag who cannot deal with reality. Face it, b1tch, you're yingtarded as$ is owned. And that's nothing that you can do about it, as$clown.

But you didn't see computers, did you?

Once upon a time, RS was fairly big player in the consumer computer market. But then they found it was too competitive a market, and they could not compete with computer stores like CompUSA, MicroCenter, etc. Now RS sells cables, adapters, disks, etc., but not computers.

> In theory, Radio Shack should be > in a much better position to sell ham equipment than HRO provided they

Right - and Wal-Mart doesn't sell ham gear.

The economy of scale situation in ham radio today is mail order/internet sales, plus hamfest/conventions. because they're the most competitive for most things. Some manufacturers sell don't sell through dealers at all - Ten Tec and Elecraft are two examples.

In the bad old days, there were "radio parts stores" here in the Philadelphia area. Plus we had mail order to Allied, Newark and Lafayette. Today the parts stores are gone but the mail order is bigger than ever: Allied and Newark are still around, plus Mouser and Digi-Key.

btw, Digi-Key got its name because it started out as a tiny mailorder business about 1968. They sold RTL logic chips to hams for Morse Code keyers. QST, APril 1968. Then they added some popular transistors, and sockets, and resistors....and the rest is history.

The radio parts stores existed, IMHO, because electronics weren't that reliable back then - and they were expensive. TVs, radios, "hi-fis", ham gear, etc., were usually fixed rather than discarded if they stopped working, and those stores sold a steady stream of parts to keep them working. There were also lots of hams and nonhams building stuff from scratch to save money over buying, or to build things that nobody manufactured.

All that has changed. Most consumer electronics is so reliable and so inexpensive now that when it fails it is usually simply replaced. Plus the cost of labor often makes it uneconomical to fix a failed device. In fact, much of it is replaced before it fails. So the repair parts business isn't what it was.

In most cases, you won't save money building electronic devices from new parts if a similar item is manufactured by some company already, because they get their parts in quantity and you don't. Any savings come from using parts that are not bought new, and custom designs that nobody manufactures.

The way to "sell" ham radio is simply to make it more visible to the general public. The biggest barrier to that, IMHO, is anti-antenna restrictions that are more common and more onerous every year.

How many of us first became aware of the existence of local amateurs by seeing their antennas?

Mr Deignan's priveleges went beyond those authorized. Riley had to reel him back in. Put him on the straight and narrow...

but he's still got a big mouth and a Hawaiin callsign.

Not at all. You were there, Mr DX. I approve.

Mr Deignan was there in PO Box only.

Did you loan out your PO Box to folks who wanted a cool Tanzanian call sign? Did you get a cool Guam call sign having never been to Guam, then pretend to Lecture people on how to run their amateur lives?

Dee, I believe you are the first Extra to recognize that not all writtens are the same. Since the beginning of the code debate, and now with the passing of the code exam, we are made to believe that the writtens are a mere insignificant formality and all the real content was in the code exam.

Of course that's not true. Thank you for being and Extra and pointing that out. You are a No Code Technician in spirit!

Never. Just don't equate the Extra exam or having Extraness as if it were an engineering degree. We'll get along Quitefine.

Right on. Jim and I had a long, long thread going quite some time ago on this very subject ("Owned or free...", IIRC) whereby I attempted to point this very fact out to him. And still, many months later, he continues to correct, proclaim and argue, often in multiple posts daily. Regardless of how quixiotic this pursuit is, the good fight must be fought!

For some reason, these guys just don't get it. This personality type seems to be compelled to respond to every 'poke and jab', quite predictably, time after time. It is a classic response to stimulus, right out of your old Psych 101 textbook......If there is, as the old adage goes, "a sucker born every minute", they seem to have a long lifespan.

It is a lot of fun to crank them up and watch them go, though - must say, I've done it a time or two myself!

OK, OK, more than two.... :)

I'll bet you've never had one tell you that he's operating outside his

Don't confuse lack of customers with economy of scale. Those little guys can't compete with the big boys any better than the local shops can compete with Wal-Mart.

I wouldn't know since that doesn't apply to me. I became interested in ham radio and SWL when I met the guy who came out to replace some tubes in my Grandfather's TV. Back then most commercial radio was AM and you could listen to stations from all over late at night on a regular radio. The guy gave me a used short wave radio and I've been hooked ever since.

That was a long time ago though and the new generations have different motivators. I think that one of the biggest motivators is the stigma of current CB operations and that a lot of people don't recognize the difference between the two.

Oops. I meant to type de motivators instead of "motivators."

In amateur radio, Len, every licensed op is superior to you. You aren't involved.

You seemed extremely interested just a post or two back. You were, you

No one indicated that you should sweat, Len. I happened to be commenting on Radio Shack and Tandy's acquisition and takeover of the Allied in 1970. You felt the need to come in with keyboard blazing.

That's a nice story, Len. Almost all electronic distributors of that day also sold amateur radio equipment and, in that time, almost no one discounted any of it.

You didn't need to look. I provided you with a quote from the company's history and Bob provided you with a Wikipedia link and post info from that site. I never stressed any importance of the company history. You didn't like it that you were wrong. Deal with it. You're often wrong.

One can go to a tiny place like RF Parts Company and find lots of HF radio parts, even high power components and transmitting tubes of all varieties for amplifiers.

Hammond is distributed by many distributors.

Hammond makes very high quality products and the cost is not high at all. The company also produces a quality line of die cast boxes of almost any size.

That's true to an extent. There is still a sizable market for high power RF components in commercial radio, industry and amateur radio.

"Province", Len. There are still numerous manufacturers of radio equipment which require radio components.

There are still numerous vacuum tubes produced by Russian, Chinese and U.S. makers. I'm glad that they only cost five times what they did in 1960. Many things I buy today cost ten or more times what I would have paid in 1960. Have you bought a pack of chewing gum or a rib-eye steak lately?

That's right, Len. There's no long a Johnson Messenger vacuum tube CB radio being made.

I musta been hIp-No-tiZeD! The funny part is where you put both of your brogans into your yap in your sidewalk superintendent persona. I found

You're probably correct. Now that the morse requirement is gone, the focus will turn towards something else.

What I've observed (particularly in this forum) is a great deal of resentment towards extra-class operators, coupled with derogatory comments regarding morse-code and its use as a licensing requirement.

The whole claim of "Einstein Extras" is one mere example.

There are people who are in all walks of life who think they know everything. That some of those people are bound to have extra-class ham licenses.

99.99% of the time when I encounter those types of people, I do my best to avoid them, and do not let their ignorance cloud my judgement against an entire class of person. It is too bad some folks in this forum cannot do the same, and enjoy interacting with others, rather than going out of their way to be combative and antagonistic.

RadShack stuff is simply way overpriced. I can buy cables and adapters for much cheaper at Staples or Circuit City. I happened to stop at one of our area Radio Shack stores two days ago to grab some chassis mount female F connectors for a receiving antenna transformer housing I'm building. I could have bought five or six of the things at even Lowe's for the same price that RadShack sells two units. I notice a 20 pack of DVD's for $7.99 Staples has a 25 pack for $3.99.

Exactly. I think Elecraft has always done so. Ten-Tec made the move a decade or so back and it hasn't hurt the company a bit.

Cincy used to have Allied, Lafayette and Olson stores along with area distributors. Ham gear was sold at an appliance store, Steinberg's until the end of 1968. The city also had Coston's, a dealer in amateur radio gear. Queen City Electronics sold ham gear exclusively until upstart R&L, a discounter in Hamilton became so lare that it put Queen City under.

The company has never forgotten its roots either. There are no minimum quantities and no minimum order.

You're right about the selling. In these parts, the antenna restrictions are few and far between. When N8NN and I have done our two-man FD efforts, we always manage to get a blurb about our operation and Field Day in the local paper. We stress that the public is invited. Our county ARES group does the same and holds its FD at a county park.

I suppose that happens often. I actually heard a local ham on the air before I noticed an antenna.

You're a selective reader, "Leo". Good old Mr. Wilson, er Len saw my post about Tandy/Radio Shack gobbling up Allied electronics and had to attempt to dazzle me with his expertise. A lengthy treatise including his having been around when Allied came into existence followed.

Yessir, Len's a regular puppeteer.

The little guys can and do compete. They do it by offering service that the big boys don't and by offering items that the big boys don't carry.
What you mean is that they can't compete on price alone.

Their 2m hand held was actually decent. I have one. Not as rugged as an old Motorola HT220, though. User interface wasn't that great, but the Icom IC-02AT was worse. The radio Shack rig did had an excellent tight band receiver front end. Less intermod issues.

I honestly doubt it.

Ham gear is such a niche market, it isn't cost effective for Radio Shack to offer it at the individual store level. The per-capita number of hams simply doesn't make it viable. There's little reason to carry a $1000+ product (say, a decent HF radio) when you might sell 1 a year, if you're lucky.

Sure, in some markets, where there is a densely populated ham concentration, Radio Shack may do good. Or, perhaps offering products mail-order they might do okay.

Would they be able to compete with Yaesu, Kenwood, et al with their own product line? Again, I doubt it. Will they be able to compete price-wise with the large mail-order discount places? Again, I seriously doubt it, due to the overhead requirements of each store.

It is my honest opinion that ham gear at the retail level is all but extinct.

I'm sure it's all innocent oversight (or maybe not), but does it seem that the notion of field members is disappearing from the radar screen at HQ?

A few years ago we eliminated 'Section News', traditionally the 'local news' of our club (yes, ARRL is a club) from QST, and now I see an article on the League web site that the Membership and Field Services departments have been organized out of existence into a larger department with the ambiguous name of "Programs and Services".

Paraphrasing the old cliche "You are what you eat", a study of organizations will reveal "You are what you call yourself". When the names "Field" and "Membership" disappear from HQ departments it sends a troubling message about where HQ attention is focused.

Here's a serious suggestion to our elected leaders and HQ hired help. Maybe if you pay more attention to MEMBERS you'd have more of them. Leave the lawyering and lawsuits to the ACLU.

I just simply do not see it happening. Most RatShacks are too small to carry a wide range of ham gear. Furthermore, the per-capita number of hams in most areas is too small.

Certain RatShacks may do ok selling ham gear, but as a whole? I doubt it.

Heck, how much demand is there for RatShack's selling of FRS and CB Gear? Not very much, I believe, based on the very limited (if any) selection I've seen in the 4 stores I've frequented over the past few years.

When Cincinnati had one Radio Shack store, the store manager actually knew something about parts that he carried. The folks in the Lafayette, Allied and Olson stores had a number of people who were knowledgeable.

A couple of the electronic distributors I worked for had product managers who knew several lines inside and out. They also hired inside telephone sales people and counter people who were very knowledgeable about components. At one of them, the sales manager, two of the outside salesmen, three of the four inside sales people and two of the counter men were hams.

Yep. The time before my last trip, I went in for wire wrap #30 wire. It is great for winding impedance matching transformers on binocular ferrite cores--much better than enamel wire. The salesman told me that he didn't think they carried it. I went to the wall and grabbed it. He then attempted to interest me in a cell phone. When I told him that I wasn't interested, he began offering batteries.

This last trip was for the F connectors. Again I received a pitch on cell phones and batteries.

You're correct. The 2m mobile rigs were not as good as the one hand held transceiver. RadShack also carried a number of brand name 2m and 70cm antennas along with Radio Shack branded antennas. The fact remained that if one went into a Radio Shack store with questions about any of the amateur radio equipment, it was highly unlikely to find a single sales person who had 1) the right answer or 2) any answer other than "I don't know". I contrast that to the guys at Circuit City stores I've visited. The sales people seem to have had good product knowledge training.

There's a way for Radio Shack to put the "radio" back in its name.
Right now it is a company in need of a purpose. If it doesn't change, it is going to disappear or be reincarnated as a bunch of battery and cellular phone kiosks in malls.

Right. Read on for a way to accomplish it.

The company has the ability to do both. What it lacks is management with the will and vision to set it up and a good training program for salespeople. RadShack would do well to hire hams as sales people.

They don't have to. All they'd need do is offer those brands. They could include some RadShack brand items if they chose to.

That's not right, Mike. R&L Electronics started out thirty years back in a garage full of shelving. The owners, Rita & Larry, began it as a sideline business while Larry was working full time as a machinist.

It then moved to a small location in the middle of downtown Hamilton, Ohio. After a number of years, R&L relocated again to an old supermarket the size of an average IGA store. That's where it is still located. R&L is one of the big players. It is stuffed with equipment, runs full page QST and CQ ads and meets or beats the prices of HRO or AES. It does this with the one rather small store.

> It is my honest opinion that ham gear at the retail level is all but > extinct.

In my earlier comments, I mentioned the Radio Shack might designate one store in a given market area for carrying amateur radio equipment. That'd be the way they could become a player. It would only need folks with product knowledge and stock at those particular stores. The employees of other RadShack outlets would only need know enough to point potential customers to that store.

Ham gear at the retail level is what everybody is doing. The stores themselves buy at the wholesale level from the manufacturers. We radio amateurs are the retail customers.

Remember some years back when I quoted Dick Irving K3FK as saying that there comes a point in the life of any bureaucracy when it forgets the purpose of the organization and begins to spend its time perpetuating the bureaucracy?

You'll note that the guy who made the announcement is the same guy Wayne Mills mentions when he made his voluntary exit from the DXCC desk.

"The guy" is Harold Kramer, WJ1B. He's the overall office manager at HQ.

Wayne was Membership Services Manager, one of the groups which got reorganized out of existence. DXCC was just one of many services in his department.

only problem he had is that was short on information.

Think "Rocky Balboa" as their "role-model" in their heads.

[note the geographic nearness of Philadelphia... :-)]

The fanstasy syndrome is, unfortunately, endemic to the human psyche. PR folks earn their living capitalizing on that. CELEBRITES become paragons of just about anything due to PR work. The "audience" confuses the CHARACTER (on-screen) with the real person portraying the character.
I am waiting for the first HAM-ACTOR to be featured in QST...how will the League portray him or her? :-)

On computer screens the fantasy syndrome can easily "take over" and the God of Radio (in here) is formed, complete with cliques of like-minded "gods" proclaiming "their"
greatness, expertise, and "better than the 'inferiors' (not of their clique)." The problem for the group as a whole is that once "IN" that fantasy, their egos refuse to let them admit any wrong-doing...they were "always right" and everyone else disagreeing with them "always wrong." Case in point is Cranky Spanky and his constant "corrections" on minutae, word play (everything "must" be "factual" and "absolutely standard"), history of radio (that he could never have experienced personaly).

Ya know (almost paraphrasing 'John Smith I'), after almost two dozen years of computer-modem communications, I'm beginning to wonder if I have seen all the possible basic types...all I see is small variations, sub-sub-genres of basic conditions. The variations vary with the general topic (supposedly) but it all boils down to EGO and "credentialism" and something akin to "the divine right of kings" (to RULE). In a hobby activity. ?

>For some reason, these guys just don't get it. This personality type >seems to be compelled to respond to every 'poke and jab', quite

>right out of your old Psych 101 textbook......If there is, as the old

Not always that long. Two regulars in here, high code-rate tested and Titled as "amateur extras" have passed on. Haven't heard of any no-code-test advocates going beyond the ionosphere. They were adamant to their end on the "necessary skills" etc., etc., etc.

Some of the gods-of-radio clique have gotten clever in what they consider dialogue. Cranky is really good at the IMPLIED expertise question-challenge: "Len, you don't know all of my education" or "Len, you don't know all the experience I've had with other modes" for two examples. Yes, I don't and Yes, I don't give a shit. What one writes and HOW they write it are the "tell" if anyone has the experience or desire to do something... which lets me know whether anyone really cares to talk about a project or activity. I could care less if their "friends and neighbors" come over to applaud and praise their hobby things. :-) Even a "frankenbox" kluge will look high-tech and mysterious to someone not involved with electronics. <shrug> I've known that for a long time and don't make it a point to point to "wondrous works" out of my workshop. I do that stuff because I like to to it for me, not "my friends and neighbors" or to earn "credentials" or to tack a (misused) "honours" label of a callsign after my name.

Back a while ago we had a friendly little discussion on the old Icom R-70 communications receiver. Cranky and der Robust Oberst had to butt in and attempt to change the subject, apparently on their ever-present need to show me I'm such a newbie, a "nothing" in "radio." :-) I've never claimed that R-70 to be "best in the world" or anything else but reliable. Did a full work-up on it last year and it still meets Icom's stated specs for performance. <shrug> Those specs were state-of-the-art two decades ago and still are. Heh heh heh...I can turn them on just by mentioning I "paid cash" for it.

I did. I earned every penny of that "cash" by working for a living (in regular hours then). I'm still trying to decipher WHY earning a living is such a "moral flaw" to them in regards to radio. :-)

>It is a lot of fun to crank them up and watch them go, though - must >say, I've done it a time or two myself!
>OK, OK, more than two.... :)

No sweat to me. :-) Been there, done that, got so many T-shirts...etc.

I'm still expressing (internal) wonder at Herr Oberst and his moral felony charges of NOT GETTING A HAM LICENSE FIRST. And, AFTER ALL THIS TIME! Wow! It's practically a charge of "treason!" This "Joe McCarthy" of the newsgroup is really Captain Oblivious to what I've said about my actual interest in RADIO. Not amateur radio but ALL radio. I think it marvelous and got INTO my career because of a fortuitous exposure to big time HF comms when I was young and serving my country in the Army. NO! NOT CORRECT! NOT PROPER! MORAL FLAW OF CHARACTER NOT TO WORSHIP, LOVE, HONOR MORSE CODE!

Sigh. Between Cranky and der Oberst they must have denuded whole forests to collect wood in attempting to burn me at the stake for such RELIGIOUS HERESY! :-) [not "environmentally conscious" are they?]

Ahem, on 23 Feb 07 comes the beginning of the Great USA Radio Depression, the END OF THE WORLD their imagined little world of morsemanship! I can't wait to hear what these paragons of pompous propriety (amateur style) are going to say afterwards! Already they've been "warning" me to GET A LICENSE! :-)
What, to sanctify my US First 'Phone that morphed into a 'GROL' two decades ago and is still ON RECORD at the FCC? [it is lifetime duration now] To sanctify my work experience that began professionally 55 years ago? To sanctify my (short) 33-year professional membership (now a Free Lifetime membership) in the IEEE? Of course! To these "extraordinary gentlemen" (of comic book fame), my terrible treasonous moral impropriety was NOT GETTING A HAM LICENSE FIRST!

Quick, call US HOMELAND SECURITY! Have me picked up, arrested straightaway as an ENEMY OF THE STATE!

Gotta love it. They are more fun than a barrel of red-hatted morse monkeys!

Come to think about it, they ARE the little red-hatted morse monkeys dancing to the ARRL organ tunes! :-)

Stay warm up there and best regards,

True enough. But, in contrast, my wife could have bought her iRobot set from Sears. [Sears began in Chicago, too...:-)] But, iRobot sold a package of Roomba and Scooba DIRECT for slightly less than what Sears was charging.

Note: The iRobot products owe their workability to solid-state ELECTRONICS, especially microprocessors.
Modern-day HF transceivers owe their workability to solid-state ELECTRONICS, especially microprocessors.

Wal-Mart, Target, K-Mart, Sears, J.C.Penney all sell direct through the Internet. Nobody (except John Smith I) seems to recognize the truly HUGE market revolution brought on by the Internet. Amazon.com did...[push, push]

My first "interest" in radio was as a young teen-ager building and flying model aircraft. I read about "radio control" of them and thought that would be neat. One of the adult model flyers in the club was a pre-WW2 amateur as well as a pro licensee in radio working for the CAA. [was so long ago that it wouldn't be NASA for a while and 'NOAA' didn't exist then...:-)]

My $98 (retail) National NC-57 receiver was bought via a $100 prize earned in competitive free-flight model flying in Detroit, MI, in 1948. Still have the trophy but the NC-57 has aged more than me...:-)

Everyone has a different episode of first-discovery but it is proclaimed that only 'certain kinds' of discovery are the 'only right-and-proper' ones. Ptui.

There I agree totally. "CB" came into being in 1958.
I was then a calibration technician at the Ramo-Wooldridge Corporation Standards Lab in El Segundo, CA.
The lab supervisor was Ed Dodds (not sure of his call-sign but could have been W6AFU or close to it, anyway he was a pre-WW2 amateur and had a full Collins station).
Ed didn't think much of this "11-meter Charley Brown" thing but he didn't despise it either. A lot of the other olde-tymers at RW denounced it all over the place.
"HOW DARE THE FCC TAKE AWAY OUR 11-METER BAND?"
"HOW DARE THE FCC LET CIVILIANS ON HF RADIO WITHOUT A CODE TEST or even a license test?!?" Blah, blah, blah, etc. Oh, such a terrible thing!!! That was, as I see it a time of the birthing of bigotry against CB that remains in the later-generation amateur community.

No sweat to me. I put a Viking Messenger CB in my aluminum-body '53 Austin-Healey in 1959 and had a lot of fun with it. A lot of folks around here in LA did similar, mobile or fixed. Fabulous "ground plane" for a base-loaded short whip. Wasn't interested in "DX." I liked the mobile communications thing, to be able to talk to PEOPLE, not stations or callsigns.
That was the original intent of "CB," not the oldetyme hammature activity of "work DX on HF with CW."

Forty-nine years later the CB users outnumber hams by at least six to one [I think the EIA quit trying to take a measure of the number years ago]. It's a standard item in the cab for highway truckers now.

I look to the right of my computer and see one of the pair of Motorola FRS-GMRS handy-talkies that was purchased at Fry's Electronics for less than $50 the pair. My wife and I use it in and around the house. I can close my hand around it. Rechargeable NiMH batteries, AC dual charger part of the sales pack. According to the 2003 FCC Panel on Unlicensed Radio there were 15 million FRS radios sold back then.

I don't use "CB" mobile now, haven't since 1981. A cell phone works just dandy for us on highways now on one- and two-thousand mile drives cross-country in the USA. But, according to the morse mavens still flapping their worn wings prior to 15 Dec 06, I could ONLY be LEGALLY and MORALLY "CORRECT" by passing a morse code test for an amateur radio license!!! :-)

Regards,
LA

PS: The new Mouser Feb-Apr 2007 catalog 629 arrived in today's (30 Jan 07) mail. 1,838 pages. 2 3/16" thick at the spine. Good to know they are still "discovering themselves." :-)

Mr. DX was able to "scarf up DX calls" courtesy of WORKING IN THE STATE DEPARTMENT and getting DIPLOMATIC COURTESY from foreign nations. Any way one slices it, Herr Oberst was able to do that while being EMPLOYED at work that was NOT devoted to amateur radio. DIPLOMATIC COURTESY.

Did der Robust Oberst ACTUALLY TAKE THOSE FOREIGN AMATEUR RADIO TESTS...IN THEIR NATIVE LANGUAGES? Hard to say but it is likely he will not, nor ever, admit that DIPLOMATIC COURTESY was the major via for that "scarfing."

It went well beyond the "three hots and a cot" enjoyed by long-ago military radio operators who've been in here and bailed...the military that taught them morsemanship.

The State Department EMPLOYMENT served the government, but using that as a cover for "scarfing up" foreign callsigns is not an "achievement" of himself. I agree that it is less reprehensible than going into collusion with another amateur extra to falsify the intent, spirit of law to gain personal emotional advantage of having non-existant club trusteeships.

But, Heil was with the government and thinks he's here to "help." Ptui.

Dee, I give you a standing ovation for admitting that!

At last, an amateur extra licensee besides Hans Brakob who admits what has been visible for years.

The old paradigms are no longer worth a pair of pennies.
"Ham radio" needs to look at itself and its standards
very, very carefully.

The ARRL just doesn't have it to REALLY promote the hobby.
It hasn't had it for years. The ONLY promotion comes from relatively-isolated (from League hierarchy) groups who have actively pursued promotion themselves. ARRL's main "interest" is promoting its (de facto) business of selling publications. It IS a multi-million-annual-income corporation despite what Believers say is "non-profit."

The League must CHANGE its political position. Radically.
Singing to the chorus of other amateurs about how good they are is what the League leaders may want...but it is off-putting to the majority. Either they show REAL leadership as a membership organization and get with the mainstream or just be a publisher of niche activities.

There really isn't much choice for them. They've resisted and resisted and resisted BASIC changes to amateur radio activity for years. As a result they've NOT increased their membership by any worthwhile amount for years. The largest amateur radio licensee class is Technician. It's been that way for years...yet the League just shines off that easily-observable fact.

Those who really and truly LIKE amateur radio MUST resist the very-strong temptation to act as all-around extra "superiors" and demand "respect" for credentials earned in amateurism at the same time they are looking down their noses at others. Despite how much they think of themselves and other olde-tymers, their personal standards are NOT shared by others, the mainstream. They MUST learn that not all "newbies" MUST get into amateur radio as teen-agers. They MUST learn that teen-agers have many MORE diversions of very interesting activities AVAILABLE. Not the latest fad interest or popular entertainment but very real electronic activities that don't touch on radio...or, if it does touch on radio, that radio is very much more and farther from the traditional HF "short-wave" in the real world. It is what IS, not what individual olde-tymers want to preserve, that intangible wonder of something shown to them long, long ago.

I don't have the answers, don't pretend to. But, I can SEE what has happened, SEE cause-and-effect, and do not PRETEND that "radio" has remained static since the first olde-tymers "discovered" it.

I'm not an amateur. I'm a professinal in electronics. Yet, I've been a hobbyist in electronics since before most of you readers existed. I've seen the whole of electronics ("radio" is a subset of that) CHANGE radically in my lifetime. I've also seen that younger olde-tymers bitterly resist change, change that they cannot control. Those who resist change can alter the course of future amateur radio by simply causing its stagnation and eventual demise.

Too bad I'm on your "kill list." We might have had a real conversation here on this. But, no, I have been categorized as "inferior" or "unworthy" or, as one put it in the past, "just horrid!" :-)

LenAnderson@ieee.org

That's hard for me to say, and I'm sure Dave won't say.

But if you check out the ARRL web site under operating from foreign countries, something which all the smartie Extras should do before they accuse people of being bootleggers, you'll find that a USA license and a fee is usually enough to obtain a call in many countries.

Pffft. I think his delusions are completely centered on you . . . I think he's got a crush on you. :)

Otherwise, why would he continually hump your leg for attention?? Why else would he sexually harass/stalk you???

Clearly, he's looking for the hook up . . . be a dear and send him a

Nah, that's just him -- his obsessions are his business.

> Otherwise, why would he continually hump your leg for attention?? Why else > would he sexually harass/stalk you???

True, but then again, I've been trolling him ever-so-carefully into frogging a bunch of my nyms (he doesn't want to frog "TransWench", for some reason, I can't imagine why).

> Clearly, he's looking for the hook up . . . be a dear and send him a pic

Feh, he can google up an image of me, if he wants...So far, the sexual harassment has been a fine source of amusement, since he appears to be utterly kl00less about the (non-)relationship between me and Ying. FTM, he says _I_ am Ying, and "SameAsB4" is a "ying collective wannabe".

I've already said in the past. This isn't the first time that Foghorn Lenhorn has attempted selling the exact same untruth. None of my overseas licensing was obtained through any "DIPLOMATIC COURTESY". The Department of State has no one facilitating amateur radio licensing for its employees.

Reciprocity is the key. Obtaining a license overseas is normally done by going to the PTT with a passport containing a valid visa for residency or for a visit, a notarized photocopy of a U.S. amateur license. An application is filled out and a fee is paid. Nobody at the Department of State fills out the application. No embassy staff member is tasked with filling out the application. The USG does not pay the licensing fee. Americans working for private companies and American tourists can do the very same thing.

Len has made a number of factual errors. You've just been witness to another. Len not only has an ax to grind with amateur radio ops, ARRL members, Morse Code operators and testing advocates. He doesn't like the U.S. Department of State for whatever reason.

Aren't you curious about what went well beyond the "three hots and a cot"? Len never gets around to telling us.

Len has made another factual error. Yes, I trotted down the the local PTT, filled out the application, presented the necessary paperwork and paid the fees all by myself.

But you'll note that Leonard uses the term "less reprehensible" about something which didn't take place the way he said it did and which was not in any form reprehensible. If it had taken place the way he said it took place, it still wouldn't have been reprehensible. He'd rather ramble on, quizzing you about whether I took foreign radio amateur exams in their native language. Well, I could have taken a Finnish amateur radio exam in English. All it would have gotten me is a sequentially issued Finnish call. I could have taken the Sierra Leonean and Tanzanian exams in their official language--English. What would have been the point. Reciprocity guaranteed me a license corresponding to the highest class license each government issued. I was never concerned that it might cause angst to non-radio amateur retiree on the U.S. West Coast.

Careful about getting caught up in the factual errors. I worked quite a number of Europeans on 160m the past four evenings.

Of course, for ordinary USA citizens.

It is naive to assume that Diplomatic Courtesy "did NOT play a role" in those furrin' calls. Heil was a USA EMBASSY STATIONED STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE.
BFD.

Diplomatic Courtesy alone would grease the wheels of beaurocracy that exist in all governments. Even in the big, rich, powerful nation of Guinea-Bisseau.

If I remember (from long-ago postings in here), State's "key list man" was the ONLY amateur radio licensee in Guinea-Bisseau? Distinct honor?

The bands are closed?!? You mean they aren't open 24/7 so that any ham anywhere can talk all around the globe with a teeny QRP rig on HF? Oh, my. That IS sad news. Kinda goes against what the mighty gods of extra radio were implying in here while busy giving me a "theory lecture."

Hmmm...maybe there's a "morseman holiday" or something, like a bank holiday when all the banks are closed?

more to do with making sure you have the education you'll need to debate.
The debate is no fun for me if you are mentally incapable of it. I'm giving you an opportunity to educate yourself. That's all." -- A trashy former virus-writer turned Outer Filth doesn't know if he's playing or working, in MID: <1159389579.179851.33970@e3g2000cwe.googlegroups.com>

"I am incapable of original thoughts" -- Ctrlï¿½/Altï¿½/Delï¿½ has an honest moment, in MID: <0h59i25ejlthqeeitdp0hlk4kvo1ejpkt9@4ax.com>

"But now the end is near. Now Mark Foley comes along and is making almost all liberal dreams come true and seriously, I'm sorry for it.
See, I believe in karma. I believe what comes around goes around and I know full well that it's just bad juju to wish such a level of turmoil and ill upon other humans, warmongering gay-hating maladroits or no, and that the real path of enlightenment is paved with forgiveness and progress and white-hot love and turning the other cheek and scotch.

"In fact, Jesus said something about that, I do believe. He said, "Knock it off already with the warmongering and the hating of each other and let's all get some wine and party like it's 2012." Then again, he never saw Karl Rove stab the nation with the dull ice pick of bogus fear. He never heard George W. Bush describe brutal war and the death of tens of thousands as "just a comma" in world history.

"Check that. Maybe I'm not so sorry after all." -- Mark Morford,

Hail Eris!
Demon Prince of Absurdity; COOSN-029-06-71069

"And no, I did not have sex with my son. But if I did I certainly wouldn't tell you. Something so beautiful and precious should be kept private." -- Kathy L. Mosesian, or possibly not really her, confesses she may be a liar and committer of incest with her own son, in MID:
<cfcd3f4660694e3afeaadaa2723e9ab1@msgid.frell.theremailer.net>

The reporter asked Colin Powell (or George Bush), "What proof do you have that Iraq has weapons of mass destruction?"
He replied, "We kept the receipts." -- Bill Hicks

Looney Maroon nominee for August 2006 Johnny D Wentzky foamed:
"You never asked someone who goes into areas of the internet that are only for adults who has an underage id somehow or another if they are a cop posing as an underage person online?
I guess lots of people just don't watch dateline or read stories much.
Why don;t you go to pervertedjustice,com and see what they do. They are awash in their self-proclaimed glory after they lied to membners of the public.
They are awash in their self-proclaimed glory after they posed as an underage person and agreed to do all sorts of sex acts wioth adult males, and they are adults posing as teenager themselves. They make themsleves into liars by falsely impersonating underage persons and by not fuilfilling the words they tell the victims online in their chats.
Why don't you read it where they tell these victims of their deceit about how they have been with grown men and such? Why don't you read it where they say, "That would be cool." after someone makes an advance towards an adult who is posing as a teenager? And, where they agree to meet the person, etc.
Lost control, didn't you?
Is that why you feel as if you need to lie so much now? I see where lots of these false impersonation games are not sticking. They feel as if they can lie and then order the victims to get counseling in the gayblade, governmental, pro-choice tax leech counseling centers. They are doing nothing more than usury and fraud in many cases." -- Wentzky almost comes out of the closet as a pedo/ephebophile in MID:

You could be right. However, there wouldn't be anything wrong with looking at the potential base of good people who could be interested in ham radio and trying to figure out what aspects might motivate them in joining in the hobby. Well, except that we are in the wrong ng to do that right here and would need to start another thread in the appropriate ng instead. I guess I'm questioning whether we should recruit hard or recruit smart? Perhaps both wouldn't hurt anything.

However, to be honest with you and the others here, I've got a crisis going on here right now. My wife had a brain tumor removed a little over a week ago and we just found out tonight that the tumor was malignant. She lost use of her left arm and leg during the operation and will require radiation therapy after the physical therapy. I'll leave it up to those who are already here to decide among yourselves if a discussion of the potential base and what motivates them would be beneficial in the appropriate ng or not.

Hey, it's better than holding on to old vendettas and it could give everyone a chance to provide some thoughtful input since it should be pretty non controversial. Give it a thought and do what you will. I'll post as time permits, but things are going to get really busy here for the next few months. I was wanting to study and take the General exam, but that too will take a back burner right now.

Take care all and I'll post when time permits.

Bob

You knocked me over to get over there and felch the contents that Bicurious ying collective associate left. I was running away from his gay as$ you were running towards him. He knows your pus$y is toxic so he's gonna club you any second now.

Douche, b1tch, douche!

I am porchmonkey4life and I love to felch animals c0ck! I love to suck my daddy's huge d1ck and lick his huge hairy balls! I love to drink my daddy's jizz and lick my mommy hairy diseased c*nt. I love it when my petdog f*cks me up me stretched out wide as$.

Hi All. I am TextTard aka SameAsB4 and I am a gay male and I am very attracted to you (if you have a d1ck -- human or animal it doesn't matter). Nowadays it is so hard to meet attractive well endowed men/animals that a decent, such as yourself. In gay or bicurious relationships I also function as the bottom-boy. This means that I am the one penetrated. In Bondage type scenarios, I am always the submissive.

I am a pre-op transexual. I am still trying to raise the funds to have my penis cut off and reshaped into a vagina.

I hope I haven't repulse you or even alarmed you. I am being a little bet forward because decent "real" men are hard to find. I can accommodate up to 14 inches of penis in my rectum with feeling pain.

If this is something that might interest you, please send me e-mail at <exebuyola@yanospamhoo.com>.

I have plenty of sex toys that could be used on me.

If you were repulsed, I apologize. I read some of your posts and you seem like a diamond in the rough. Thanks again, for your attention.

I think you left the field too wide open. Even Hatter and Ying out-class

Actually I think it's more a patchwork job instead of a comprehensive one. Like the person who patches up a leaky roof rather than redo the whole thing from the rafters up. The patches cost less at the time, but you have to keep patching.

The whole 125-75-175 mile Conditional distance thing looks like a regulatory patch job. FCC restructured the ARS license classes in 1951, did the Great Giveaway of 1952, then found their offices flooded with amateur exam-takers. So they reduced the Conditional distance and made Novice and Tech by-mail-only to lighten the load.

Of course not. But things do change over time. For example, the Watergate scandal changed the way a lot of Americans loooked at the Federal government, and how much
it was trusted by them.

I'd put a modernized version of it. Something like this:

Suppose a ham rig has reference-oscillator accuracy of .001% when new, and the output frequency can be considered as accurate as the reference oscillator. Suppose also that the rig has a negative temperature coefficient of 2 parts per million per degree C over the range from 5 to 35 degrees C, and the display can read out to 10 Hz.
What is the lowest indicated frequency on the 15 meter band that a General class amateur should use for Morse Code operation, assuming the worst temperature condition and allowing 500 Hz for aging and other factors?

Automatic flunk.

Good point!

One of the big changes that Watergate and similar scandals (remember that guy who was found drunk in the reflecting pool with a woman named "Fannie Fox"?) brought was that the mainstream press would publish those stories instead of hushing them up. The personal foibles of government officials used to be considered off-limits, but not any more.

>Your argumen could be > used as saying that there was no steroid abuse in baseball before the Agreed!

But at the same time, it is an equally flawed argument to say that there was as much cheating then as now, without any evidence.

I'm also expressing factual information as to how the tests used to be, compared to how they are now.

My use of the word "accurate" is meant to refer to the factual information as to how the tests used to be, compared to how they are now - not the opinions surrounding them.

Sorry if that wasn't clear.

>   Innacurate is a present day euphemism for lying.

It can be. Inaccurate can also mean a lot of other things. "Lying" generally means the telling of an untruth where the teller knows what is being told is untrue, but says it anyway with the intent to deceive the listener.

I don't think you are trying to deceive anyone.

>   I would hope that you are not accusing me of lying when I'm simply > offering my opinion.

In all my years on rrap, I have not accused anyone of lying. Telling untruths isn't necessarily lying - the teller could just be making a mistake.

> > And I would say that human beings - young, old, male, female - are

I disagree! IMHO, it depends on the induhvidual.

> > The most easily-upset person who posts to rrap isn't middle aged -

>   I dont' know if upset is hte correct word.

I think it is.

> He's having his version > of fun with you folks that want to argue with him.

I don't argue with him. I correct some of his mistakes and state correct factual information, and my opinions. That often drives him bonkers, but that's his problem, not mine.

> Kind of a co-dependency thing. ;^)

I'll stick with my transference and projection diagnosis.

Besides, the person in question won't be posting to rrap much longer, and won't be in the new moderated group. So it's really a moot point.

Old joke:

Two substance-abusers and a codependent are sentenced to death on the guillotine by a king.

The first substance abuser is put in the machine, the lever pulled,
the blade comes down - and miraculously stops a few inches above the condemned substance-abuser's neck.

The king says "it's a miracle" and lets the first condemned person go free.

The second substance abuser is put in the machine, the lever pulled,
the blade comes down - and miraculously stops a few inches above the condemned substance-abuser's neck.

The king says "it's a miracle" and lets the second condemned person go free.

The co-dependent person is led to the machine, but says "I can fix this!"

A little friendly bitching goes a long way! Just got this reply from my Director.

Hans:

As will shortly be announced the name of combined Membership Services and Field Services Departments will Membership and Volunteer Programs (MVP). The thought was the new name works on two levels, it describes the activities AND the abbreviation reflects the importance of those served.

Huh?

I feel like an ARRL member who didn't like something at HQ, complained about it, and it got changed.

Is it legal to modify a 2-meter amateur radio transceiver to transmit on all frequencies it can receive? It seems to me that such a modification could be useful in case of an emergency. Additionally, as long as the power is limited to 2 watts, it should be legal on MURS bands, right?

A very astute friend sent me the following:

Q: When does a person decide to become an engineer?
A: When he realizes he doesn't have the charisma to be an undertaker.

Q: What do engineers use for birth control?
A: Their personalities.

Q: How can you tell an extroverted engineer?
A: When he talks to you, he looks at your shoes instead of his own.

Q: Why did the engineers cross the road?
A: Because they looked in the file, and that's what they did last year.

Q: How do you drive an engineer completely insane?
A: Tie him to a chair, stand in front of him, and fold up road map the wrong way.

You can tell you're an engineer if:

Choosing between buying flowers for your spouse and upgrading your RAM is a problem.

You take a cruise so you can go on a personal tour of the engine room.

In college, you thought Spring Break was meta l fatigue failure.

The salespeople at the local computer store can't answer any of your questions.

At an air show, you know how fast the skydivers are falling.

For your spouse's birthday you gave a new CD-ROM drive or a Palm Pilot.

You can quote scenes from any Monty Python movie.

You can type 70 words per minute but you can't read your own handwriting.

You comment to your wife that her straight hair is nice and parallel.

You sit backwards on Disney rides so you can see how they do the special effects.

You have saved every power cord from all your broken appliances.

You have more friends on the Internet than in real life.

You know what http:// stands for.

You see a good design, and have to change it.

You spent more time choosing your calculator than you did your wedding ring.

You still own a slide rule and know how to use it.

You think that people yawning around you are sleep deprived.

You window shop at Radio Shack.

Your laptop computer cost more than your car.

Your spouse hasn't the foggiest idea of what you do at work.

You've already calculated how much you make per second.

You've tried to repair a $5 radio.

First question, is it legal to modify your 2 meter rig... Yes, but that does not make it legal to actually use on these new frequencies. Other radio services generally require FCC certification of the equipment for it to be used legally. For example, you can modify your 10 Meter rig to have the capacity to transmit on 11 Meters (CB) but you legally cannot transmit on the new frequencies unless your radio is certified for that service (which it won't be in this case.)

Ham Radio enjoys the privilege to build and modify equipment for Part 97 operation without formal certification, so you can take a CB and re-tune it to 10 Meters if you want, just not the other way. Also you can only do this on a limited basis. For instance, you can build an HF amplifier for your own use without FCC certification, but once you start building them to sell you must get FCC certification for a part 97 device.

For your second question:

No, it would not be legal to use a Part 97 certified device (modified or not) in any other service that required use of FCC certified equipment. Part 95 (MURS) specifically requires that equipment being used is certified for that Part and does not allow equipment certified under other parts to be used. Your Part 97 certified 2 meter rig, modified to use on Part 95 frequencies would be illegal.

Now, would the FCC care in the case of a true emergency? I doubt they would. But it's a chance you are taking. I don't care to loose my hard won license this way...

Who are these groups? What are they doing that ARRL is not?

One of the most visible promotions of amateur radio is Field Day.
Every
club Field Day I have seen in the past 20+ years has made a point of setting up in a public place, handing out literature, getting themselves in the local papers and sometimes on TV.

Field Day is sponsored by the ARRL.

I don't think they do. There are plenty of ARRL publications aimed at VHF/UHF, satellites, repeaters, meteor scatter, and other non-HF activities. QST has a considerable number of articles aimed at Technicians.

US Amateur radio is, and always has been, open to interested people of all ages. The efforts to interest young people are in recognition of the fact that young people don't have the financial and other resources

Nobody is pretending that radio has remained static. And your claims of cause-and-effect aren't proven. Correlation is not causation.

For example, the repeater boom of the late 1970s-mid-1990s brought a lot of people into amateur radio who were looking for a personal radio communications service. They were looking for a radio service that was better behaved and more reliable than cb, for local/regional personal communications.
The Technician license was their ticket, and became even more popular when its written test was simplified (1987) and lost its Morse Code test (1991).

We got a lot of new hams that way. Some became interested in things beyond the local repeater - some did not. But with the introduction of inexpensive cell phones, plus FRS/GMRS, that source of new hams has all but disappeared.

Losing that source of new amateurs is one reason for the lack of growth in US amateur radio.

Len, perhaps you should take your own advice:

"MUST resist the very-strong temptation to act as all-around extra
"superiors" and demand "respect" for credentials earned
.....at the same time they are looking down their noses at others. Despite how much they think of themselves and other olde-tymers, their personal standards are NOT shared by others, the mainstream."

> I've also seen that younger olde-tymers

Not all changes are for the better, Len. Is it wrong to resist changes?

For example, the traditional single-family detached house used to be
the "standard" home that most Americans wanted to buy. It was considered the most desirable.
But in recent decades, alternative home forms have become popular, such as condominiums, homes with in-law suites, etc. More and more American homeowners do not own a single-family detached house. The old paradigms don't work for them,

Yet some people bitterly resist the zoning changes that would accomodate the new era of real estate.

See the parallels?

Again, not all change is for the better. Unless someone can make a good case for exactly why a particular change is needed, why should it be supported?

>   Too bad I'm on your "kill list."

Len, it's a very safe bet that the reason you are on Dee's "kill list" is because of your behavior here. IMHO, Dee simply got tired of your name-calling, various forms of insult, and factual errors. She can correct me if I'm wrong - but I don't think I am.

> We might have had a > real conversation here on this.

Len, your behavior here indicates that such a "real conversation" would only last until Dee disagreed with you. It's a safe bet that at the first real challenge to your statements, you'd start with the name-calling ("Mama Dee"), and the various insults, diversions, and factual errors.

There's a good reason why, Len. And for once, it is all about you.

Now you will do one of two things: either ignore this post entirely, or respond to it in your usual manner, with name-calling, insults, etc..
The one thing you won't do is respond in a civil fashion, answer the questions I posed, or even call me by my first name and/or callsign.
